Walsh Urges U.S. to 'Mind Our Own Business'

Challenges Logan Plea That Direct Arms Aid Be Given France and Britain

Petain to Spain

FRANCE NAMED Marshal Petain, World War hero and former teacher of Generalissimo Franco, as its first ambassador to nationalist Spain. Page 7.

America Debates

Senator Logan (Democrat), Kentucky, yesterday advocated direct aid to England and France, lest they "fall prey ot the dictators."

His statement, delivered as the Senate chamber resounded for the fourth successive day to stormy debate over foreign policy, was immediately challenged by Senator Walsh (Democrat), Massachusetts, chairman of the powerful Naval Affairs Committee.

Declaring Europe's troubles were over lands and wealth and not forms of government, Walsh urged that the United States "mind our own business" and "be neutral, honestly, truthfully, directly and positively."

The Logan-Walsh clash featured a day in which little attention was paid to the defense bill itself, which would increase the Army's air strength to 6,000 planes and strengthen ground defenses. Many of those who have launched severe attacks on the Administration's efforts to assist Great Britain and France rearm have indorsed the arms increase itself.

Pass Supply Bill Today

Meanwhile the House planned to pass today the $500,000,000 Army supply bill, which carries funds to start the airplane expansion program. Leaders agreed to keep the body in session until the measure was finally acted on, although little or no opposition is expected.

Other defense developments were:

The Navy Department opened bids on a 1,000,000-cubic-foot dirigible and received tenders from only one company, the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of Akron, Ohio, manufacturers of the ill-fated larger airships, Akron and Macon. The smaller rigid ship will be used for training and experimental purposes to determine whether to go ahead with further development of airships.

Chairmen Walsh and May of the Senate Naval and House Military Committees introduced legislation to curb distribution of subversive propaganda among Army and Navy personnel.

Johnson Charges Propaganda

Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion, declared in an address at Dayton, Ohio, that the legion was opposed to the proposal for a war referendum before the United States could wage a foreign war. He said that such a plan was "suicidal to the rights of free men."

Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, a veteran "isolationist," declared he favored "the full measure of what is intended in the bill" before warning the Senate that the "same insidious propaganda" which brought the United States into war in 1917 is "now at work here." He laid down a two-point foreign policy which, he declared, would have the support of the Nation.

"First, America wants no war,"

Swanson Bars Navy Files to Spy Case Court

Governments Rests In Trial of Russians On Pacific Coast

By the United Press.

Los Angeles, March 2.—The Government rested its case in the Russian spy trial tonight after one of its witnesses refused to testify on orders from Secretary of the Navy Swanson.

The report which the Secretary refused to have made public concerned the surveillance under which Soviet Russian representatives were kept while in this country.

It would have related "all information about Russian engineers at the Douglas aircraft plant (which manufactures U. S. military planes), activities of G. Kaganovich, Russian commissar for heavy industry in Los Angeles, and all vice consuls of the U. S. S. R. in Los Angeles, all information on long-distance Russian fliers and their activities in Los Angeles."

Secret intelligence files concerning three details were subpenaed from Lieut. Comdr. Henri De B. Claiborne, assistant Navy intelligence officer at San Pedro. He also was asked to produce Navy intelligence reports on activities of a man named "Shermansky who was suspected of espionage, and a summer camp in New York conducted for children of Soviet citizens."

Claiborne refused to produce the

Manton Indicted As Conspirator To Defraud U. S.

New York, March 2 (AP)—Martin T. Manton, who less than a month ago was the senior Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, was indicted by a Federal grand jury today on a conspiracy charge involving receipts of large sums

A few hours after the indictment was handed up, physicians disclosed the ailing, white-haired former jurist was to undergo an operation

Ranking next to the Justices of the United States Supreme Court, Manton resigned after 23 years on the Federal bench in the midst of accusations by District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey that he had accepted loans from litigants

Italy Issues 'Call to Arms' To 300,000

Crisis Impends In Mediterranean, Says Rome; Crowds Watch Bulletins

Copyright, 1939, by International News Service.

Rome, March 2.—Three hundred thousand "war babies" and men previously rejected for physical reasons were called up for immediate military service tonight as Premier Mussolini rushed preparations to cope with the Mediterranean crisis which many observers feel impends.

Silent crowds gathered before bulletin boards as foreboding notices: "A call to arms!" went up and lads of the class of 1915 and parts of the classes born between 1915 and 1919 made ready to flock to the colors.

Authorities regarded the mobilization order as a precautionary step in line with Mussolini's pronounced policy of "always more intense military preparation," rather than an indication of immediate danger.

Yet the military measures, it was felt, clearly indicated Il Duce's determination to rally sufficient force to back up an anticipated joint determination to rally sufficient force to back up an anticipated joint demand with Germany for redistribution of colonial territories.

Called Other Classes

Previously Mussolini had called to their regiments, members of the classes of 1895, 1901, 1902, and 1903, but most of these older men were discharged. Some of those summoned were exempted earlier from military service because of their short stature.

The young men born in 1918 and 1919 called up today compose the normal conscript classes which go to the colors for training each year The call to the classes of 1916 and 1917 was tantamount to keeping under arms conscripts who had completed their training and were due to be discharged.

Altogether, it was estimated, additions to the army under Mussolini's new draft decrees total 305,000, but some of these, too, will be rejected because of physical unfitness.

The class of 1918, plus the first quarter of the 1919 class, normally would come under arms one month from now. A government spokesman would give no reason for advancing the date, merely saying "these are normal measures."

Estimates put the number of men formerly rejected, but now ordered to report for re-examination, at 100,000 to 200,000.

British Air Defense

By Joseph Driscoll.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, March 2.—By the end of this month the Royal Air Force will have 1,750 first line war planes stationed in the British Isles, prepared to resist any aerial attacks from foreign bombers and to launch a counterattack on enemy centers.

The imminent completion of this first important stage in the expansion of the R. A. F. was reported by Sir Kingsley Wood, the air minister, to Parliament today.

He also revealed that, in continuance of the expansion program, Britain will spend on her air force in the coming fiscal year, beginning April 1, the unprecedented gross sum of £220,826,700 ($1,036,945,490).

This is an increase of over 50 per cent over 1938, and is thirteen times the figures for 1933, before Britain awoke to the fact Germany was climbing ahead in the air.

The R. A. F. personnel in the coming year will total 118,000 for home defense, an increase of 22,000 over 1938.

With the disclosure of the amount required by the air ministry, it becomes apparent that Britain's budget for the defense forces and other branches of government will ap-

Mrs. Roosevelt to Christen Atlantic Air Queen Today

The Yankee Clipper, America's queen of the skies, will be christened by Mrs. Roosevelt at 2:30 p. m. today in impressive ceremonies at the Anacostia Naval Air Station. In attendance will be more than 2,000 distinguished representatives of the Federal Government, the Diplomatic Corps and business and professional life.

Dwarfing the Navy planes stationed at the terminal, the 41-ton airliner will be anchored at the ramp on the banks of the Anacostia after its flight this morning from Baltimore. Mrs. Roosevelt, standing on a platform built for the occasion, will christen the giant aircraft with water from the seven seas.

Juan Trippe, president of Pan American Airways, will be master of ceremonies placing the first of a fleet of six superclippers in passenger operation.

Counselor R. Walton Moore, of the State Department, will be the principal speaker at the function and Chairman Edward J. Noble, of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, will make a short address.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority yesterday warned all other aircraft operating in the vicinity of the National Capital not to fly within 1,000 feet of the giant aircraft.

Sealer Struggles For Port; Rescuers Stand by, Balked By Heavy Seas

Special Dispatch to The Post.

St. John's, N. F., March 2.—Battered by towering seas, the old wooden sealing ship Ranger staggered toward safety early today while her crew of 132 doggedly stripped her of everything movable.

Alongside, helpless to aid after taking off 18 men, the British freighter Newfoundland wallowed in the seas, its crew watching the Ranger fight through blinding sleet for home. They saw streams cascade from the stricken sealer, tossed overside by her crew with buckets, pots and pans from the galley, anything that would hold water.

Try to Lighten Ship

On the Ranger, men slithered over icy decks, stumbled in relays into her holds to dump out coal, provisions, furniture, cabin fittings to lighten the old vessel. They fought cold, time and steadily mounting water which poured in through opened seams, flooded the furnace fires, stopped the pumps and crept up toward the bridge.

In the storm-lashed radio shack the operator stuck by his post, relaying word of the crew's losing battle with wind and water. He reported Capt. John Badcock, her skipper, said he hoped to keep his vessel afloat until she could limp back to port.

Vessel 67 Years Old

The Ranger, 67-year-old veteran of the sealing fleet, left St. John's yesterday, first ship to put out for the banks this season. Ever since, she had fought through heavy weather which, it was hoped last night, would abate enough for the Newfoundland to take aboard more of her crew this morning.

Messages received here did not indicate the cause of the leak.

In contact with the Radio Marine station here, the Newfoundland reported in midmorning: "Very busy now attempting to get a tow aboard her. Very rough."

The Ranger had messaged during the night that she was "leaking badly."

The Newfoundland's latest report indicated the sealer was not in immediate danger of sinking.

The Newfoundland messaged at 6 a. m. that she had sighted the stricken ship and Coast Guard headquarters at Boston shortly afterward reported receipt of a message from a Cape Race radio station advising ships to resume normal traffic because the Ranger's distress had been taken care of.

"Leaking badly, impossible to keep afloat, pumps choked, assistance needed immediately," the Ranger said in her first message.

Later, in response to a call from the Newfoundland, the Ranger captain said: "We are just about holding our own by use of buckets. Engines filled up and not running. We are drifting off Cape Lawrence. Terrible roll now, but getting better."

Radio operators here fixed the vessel's position at about 90 miles from St. Johns, Newfoundland.

President Arrives At Charleston, S.C., This Afternoon

Jacksonville, Fla., March 2 (AP).—The cruiser Houston returning President Roosevelt from the fleet maneuvers around the West Indies was speeding by the Bahamas tonight as Navy Yard officers at Charleston, S. C., arranged for its arrival by 3 p. m. tomorrow.

White House staff members who had maintained temporary headquarters in Coral Gables, Fla., for the two weeks the Chief Executive has been at sea were en route to Charleston.

The Chief Executive will remain aboard the Houston until shortly before his special train leaves for Washington between 7 and 8 p. m. He will arrive in the Capital Saturday morning after a 15-day absence.

The Pope Is Chosen

By William Hillman

Copyright, 1939, by International News Service.

Vatican City, March 2.—Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state, long a guiding spirit of the Vatican's foreign policy in a world of critical events, was swiftly elected and joyously acclaimed late today the 262d Pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church, and successor to Pope Pius XI.

The new spiritual father of 400,000,000 Catholics, elevated in the shortest conclave of history, immediately chose the name of Pope Pius XII, following directly the footsteps of his predecessor as the "shepherd of peace."

Then at dusk his holiness, attired in the flowing white robes of the pontificate, made his first public appearance as apostle of St. Peter on the great central balcony of the cathedral named for the first of all the Popes and there received the roaring cheers of more than 300,000 faithful celebrants packed into the huge St. Peter's square.

Named on His Birthday

Accorded the highest office in the church on his sixty-third birthday, the newly created Pope raised his hands as the vast multitude knelt and imparted the blessing "Urbis et Orbis" (to the city and the world).

The lean and scholarly pontiff, whose election on the third ballot by the 62 cardinals of the hierarchy broke age-old precedents and set up new ones, shed tears of deep emotion as he intoned his first public pontifical benediction. His voice was hoarse.

Having received the blessing under the glimmering lights hanging from St. Peter's colonnades, the crowd jumped to its feet and emitted a thunderous eruption of cheers and shouts that rang from one end of Rome to the other. Men, women and children wept with joy and wildly waved their hands in celebration of a rare and historic milestone their Church had just passed.

Shuns Pontifical Splendor

Pius XII, whose record of diplomatic and churchly achievement already marked him a "modern pontiff" as was Pius XI, then withdrew from the loggia balcony over the central door of St. Peter's as the immense throng began melting away into the gathering night.

A few minutes later, the Pope reappeared on the balcony alone and bestowed a second, silent blessing

It Was 200-Pound Day in Gallinger Maternity Ward

Four mothers had Gallinger Hospital doctors blinking their eyes in wonderment yesterday.

Admitted to the institution at about the same time, they were:

A 278-pound woman who gave birth to a 12-pound 5-ounce baby.

A 274-pound patient who became the mother of an 11-pounder.

A woman weighing 250 pounds who had a baby weighing 9 pounds 2 ounces.

And the "baby" of the quartet, a patient tipping the scales at a mere 220, who was delivered of a 7½-pound child.

For contrast, the obstetrical ward also had as a patient yesterday a midget to whom was born a normal infant weighing 4 pounds and 4 ounces.

Pius XII, as Cardinal Pacelli, Received Degree at Georgetown; Toured U. S. by Airplane

By Edward T. Folliard

For the first time there is a Pope who knows America at first hand. As Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state, the new pontiff, Pius XII, came to the United States in the fall of 1936, arriving here on October 21 for a 24-hour visit.

When the news of his elevation was flashed from Rome yesterday, thousands of Washingtonians were able to visualize the new Holy Father. They remembered a lithe 6-footer with a long, ascetic face and keen glowing eyes behind silver-rimmed spectacles, a smiling prince of the Church who became so fascinated by the faded Constitution and the Gutenberg Bible at the Congressional Library that he was late for a luncheon at the National Press Club.

The 400 correspondents who heard him at the Press Club remembered his precise English (one of seven languages he speaks) and his fervent plea for world peace.

Recall Georgetown Visit

"Glory belongs not only to those who triumph on battlefields," he told the newspapermen, "but even more to those who safeguard and foster public tranquility and peace."

The faculty members and the students at ancient Georgetown University recalled his visit to the Hilltop to receive the degree of doctor of canon and civil laws, the only individual other than Marshal Ferdinand Foch to be so honored. They remembered how he granted the students a holiday and how they cheered him with the football yell, "Hoya, Hoya, Saxa." In a talk, he said there was no conflict between science and religion.

Recall His Strides

"And," he added, "there should be no conflict between love of God and love of country."

Catholic University also had vivid memories of the new pontiff: his long strides as he walked toward the gymnasium; his zuchetta (purple skull cap) gleaming in the sun; Archbishop Michael J. Curley's introduction, and the distinguished visitor's speech in which he revealed how, many years before, he had almost become a teacher at C. U.

Popular Urge Elected Pope, Says Walpole

Writer Feels People Influenced Choice Of New Pontiff

By Hugh Walpole.

(World Famous Novelist.)

Copyright, 1939, by International News Service.

Vatican City, March 2.—I have seen the people elect a new Pope today.

There must have been few elections in the past when so sudden and powerful an urge on the part of 300,000 men and women, gathered together in St. Peter's Square today, proclaimed who the Pope was to be long before any human being knew it.

That, at least, is how it has seemed to me during this strange, exciting and most memorable day.

I have seen some great events in my time—the declaration of war, the outbreak of the Russian revolution, the coronation of an English King and Queen. This event today equals in my experience all of those, and is entirely different from them.

Effect of Joy

It was an effect of joy, spontaneous, tremendous, and deeply genuine, which no crowd has ever given me in my life before.

Shortly after noon, at 12:20, smoke had come from the Papal chimney, thick and almost ferocious—at first strangely white, so that until I looked at the faces of the people around me I though perhaps that a new Pope had been elected on the very first morning.

After that signal, nothing occurred for a long time. There was a strong sense of anti-climax. The

Carter, Finder of Tut's Tomb, Dies Naturally Despite 'Curse'

By the Associated Press.

London, March 2.—Howard Carter, 66, Egyptologist and discoverer of the treasures of King Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb, died tonight at his London home.

CARTER

Discovery of Egyptian riches in the tomb of the boy king, Tut-Ankh-Amen in 1922 after nine years of exploration by the Norfolk - born painter and archaeologist, was of incalculable value in the study of ancient Egypt.

Lord Carnarvon financed the expedition and while scientists were examining the ancient and priceless jewels and ornaments, was fatally stricken.

His death was attributed by some to an "ancient curse" supposed to descend upon "desecrators" of the tomb.

Carter, however, ridiculed that theory as "unpardonable and mendacious."

It was said of Howard Carter that he spent half his life in the bowels of the earth.

His career was a long series of Egyptian excavations and discover-

Harrison Asks Budget Cut to Spur Business

Economy Bloc Grabs Appeasement Ball Before Roosevelt Returns to Capital

By Robert C. Albright.

Chairman Pat Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee yesterday stepped into the business appeasement drive with a demand for "a radical and substantial cut in Government expenditures."

The Senate economy bloc leader declared himself equally against a $5,000,000,000 increase in the legal debt limit or an increase in taxes that might deter business.

He suggested a joint conference of House and Senate Democrats to lay down a plan for reducing all appropriation bills by more than 10 per cent.

"A lot of this emergency stuff should be cut to hell," he told reporters called to a late afternoon press conference.

Economic Chaos Inevitable

"If immediate and unified plans are not laid, and enormous and unprecedented expenditures are continued, with the national debt mounting, economic confusion and chaos are inevitable," he said in a statement.

"I have no confidence in the economic philosophy that we must spend ourselves out of this economic disorder."

Earlier, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee decided to postpone action on Secretary of the Treasury Morganthau's request for extension until January 15, 1941, of the President's power to devalue the dollar, to continue the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, and to coin new silver mined in this country.

Delayed action on extension of the Administration's monetary powers followed a sharp protest from Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia. When Morgenthau advocated their renewal as a "shock absorber" against unstable world conditions, Glass shot back:

"I think the very fast you have this power has created the disturbance."

Recovery Efforts

Administration efforts for business recovery meanwhile continued at the Treasury and Commerce Departments. Secretary Morgenthau conferred with a committee of the National Association of Manufacturers on that group's tax and business recommendations. Secretary of Commerce Hopkins was to be in conference with members of his Business Advisory Council over the next two days.

Senator Harrison's statement came as no surprise to either Secretary Morgenthau or Undersecretary of the Treasury Hanes, with both of whom he had held frequent conferences. Harrison also conferred with Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, and with other Capitol "higher ups" said to include Vice President Garner, before he issued this statement.

Fire in Hotel Kills Four; 35 Are Missing

By the Associated Press.

Halifax, Nova Scotia, March 2.—Four bodies were recovered and 35 persons were unreported tonight after a fire swept the century-old Queen Hotel, causing damage estimated at $800,000.

The four charred bodies were removed from the smoldering ruins late today and firemen said two other bodies could be seen in the wreckage.

The authorities said they would be unable to make an estimate of the dead until the ruins cool.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

(Homer Cummings' imperturbability is one of the Capital's miracles. After six years as Attorney General he left that office voluntarily, as mellow a philosopher as he was in 1933. His guest column today gives a clew to what lies behind his adamantine good humor. The next guest column will be by an anti-New Dealer.—Harlan Miller.)

BY HOMER S. CUMMINGS
(Attorney General, 1933-39)

TO THE PRESS: During my six years as a member of the Cabinet I have often wished that I might have had at my disposal—a column. Today, when I no longer need one, I have one. It seems, nevertheless, like a glorious opportunity to even up scores with certain members of the press. But the scores are so few—why bother?

Mr. Cummings ... magnanimous

I was recently presented with a beautiful humidor by my friends of the Fourth Estate.

"Why did you choose one made of brass?" I asked.

"That," they replied, "is to remind you of Washington correspondents."

Possessed of a certain skepticism, these Capital newsmen are, nevertheless, a grand bunch—honest, industrious, capable and fair.

"—the court fight wasn't lost?"

A well-meaning friend said to me the other day, "General, you have the satisfaction of having accomplished just about everything you fought for as Attorney General except—the Court plan."

"Friend," I replied, "there's a book I want you to read some day. No, it hasn't been published yet. In fact, I haven't written it! But I'm going to some day, and the thesis will be simply this—the Court fight was won, not lost."

We have today a liberal Court. And remember the shift came during the debate on the Court plan. Those provisions of the bill providing for direct appeals on Constitutional questions, 3-judge courts in injunction cases, assignment of judges to pressure areas, the right of the Attorney General to intervene in cases where acts of Congress are under attack—all these are law today.

Twenty more Federal judgeships have been created by the Congress. As a result of the debates on the Court plan, our people have come to grasp three important facts: (1) the Constitution is not a static document; it is a great charter of liberties and protects without confining a free and vital people; (2) judges are human, and (3) judges interpret the Constitution.—Q. Administration Is Reported Urging Tobin to Labor Parley

Head of Teamsters Union Repeatedly Has Sought Peace With C. I. O.; Green Names Rickert to Vacant Place

By the Associated Press.

Administration forces were reported tonight to be trying to prevail on Daniel J. Tobin, teamsters' union leader, to reconsider his decision not to serve on an A. F. L. committee appointed to conduct peace negotiations with the C. I. O.

Both in A. F. L. and Administration quarters there were expressions of surprise and signs of dismay over Tobin's decision, since he has been the federation's most outspoken advocate of an immediate end to the labor schism.

Tobin announced Wednesday he could not serve because of pressure of other work and yesterday William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, selected Thomas A. Rickert, head of the United Garment Workers Union, to take the vacant place.

However, some of Secretary of Labor Perkins' advisers on the peace problem were reported to be hopeful that the negotiating committees would be enlarged to include Tobin if he finally agreed to serve.

He is widely regarded as the one figure in the A. F. L. high command most likely to bring about an agreement with the C. I. O. president, John L. Lewis.

The selection of Rickert was regarded as a new complication.

He will meet at the conference his one rival in the clothing industry—Sidney Hillman, of New York, president of C. I. O.'s Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union.

Prior to the President's sponsorship of the forthcoming negotiations there were reports that if unity were eventually achieved, the C. I. O. would demand that Hillman replace Rickert on the A. F. L.'s executive council.

Representative Lanham (Democrat), of Texas, recalled that his State declared her independence from Mexico exactly 103 years ago yesterday.

Senate approval was given for all features of a conference report upon the $1,898,000,000 independent offices annual supply bill, save minor amendments. Agreement upon the latter was expected to be reached today, sending the measure to President Roosevelt for signature.

Representative John G. Alexander (Republican) of Minnesota, charged Secretary of Agriculture Wallace with violation of both the United States tariff act and tariff laws of most foreign nations by paying wheat export subsidies. He said illegal wheat subsidies resulted in sale of American bran and shorts to dairymen in Holland at lower cost than that paid by American producers of dairy products.

Only "if it stops raining" in Florida after construction of the proposed $200,000,000 Florida canal, will the fresh water supply in the southern part of that State be destroyed, Sidney Page, former director of the United States Geological Survey, told the House Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Page answered assertions construction of the canal would ruin the underground fresh-water supply of the section. He said such statements are "baseless."

"Bait of back pay" is being used by the National Labor Relations Board to stir up labor strife, Representative Anderson (Democrat), of Missouri told the House.

"There is no question or doubt that the labor board personnel in its attempt to build up a statistical record to justify its existence has used the bait of back pay for the purpose of creating labor strife instead of eliminating it, in St. Louis."

Hahns to Open 5th Store Tomorrow

Hahn's fifth Washington shoe shop will be opened tomorrow at Connecticut and Albermarle streets. This shop is a complete shoe store for women, girls, children, boys and young men, within easy reach of this large residential section. The same shoes and accessories available in all downtown Hahn shops will be carried.

Free parking at the rear of the store has been arranged for customers. On opening day there are to be flowers for women and souvenirs for the children. Inspection of the shop, which will be open until 9 p. m. Saturday, is invited. Hahn's opened their first store in Washington in 1876 and now operate in Baltimore as well as locally.

House Group Votes Bill for Reorganization

Paves Way for Early Floor Action; G. O. P. Protests Speed

By a "strictly party vote," a special House committee at its first meeting yesterday indorsed the new bill for reorganization of Federal agencies and will report it out today, paving the way for possible House action on the measure next week.

With Republicans angrily protesting that they had not had sufficient time to study the bill, which was introduced by Representative Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, eight days ago, the Democratic majority approved it without amendments.

The proposed legislation is far less drastic than the reorganization bill that was defeated last session after tearing Democratic ranks apart. It would give President Roosevelt power to submit reorganization proposals which would become effective unless the House and Senate, in concurrent resolution, vetoed them.

Taber Sees Dangers

It was this provision for only negative Congressional control that drew fire yesterday from the three minority members of the nine-man committee, and threatened to arouse an intensive Republican attack when the measure reaches the floor.

Representative Taber, of New York, ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee and one of the Republicans on the Reorganization Committee, asserted that the feature of the bill that follows reorganization plans to take effect—even though one of the two Houses of Congress disapproves—might permit alterations "tremendously dangerous to the country."

Asserting that the use of concurrent resolutions for matters of this type would be "unprecedented," Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, declared that "it is singular indeed that when the President deposits a reorganization plan on the doorstep of Congress, it automatically becomes law unless both Houses state they do not favor such a proposal. This is a legislative stepchild that will one day arise to plague the Congress."

Wanted Public Hearings

Representative Gifford, of Massachusetts, said "I particularly object to the negative method of preventing reorganization plans." Observing that he "would have liked the courtesy of having more than a two-hour discussion," Gifford added that he thought the committee should have held public hearings before reporting the bill.

Although it was virtually certain that Republican opposition would center on the bill's method of vetoing Presidential proposals, Minority Leader Martin, of Massachusetts, refused to commit his party or himself.

Indicating he thought the bill was so mild it could hardly arouse any reasonable opposition, Representative Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, its author, commented after the committee meeting that "anyone who didn't know the genesis of this bill would think Mr. Taber had written it."

Warren said the Republican demand for hearings had been ignored by the Democratic majority in the committee because the entire matter of reorganization has already been so thoroughly threshed out. "Hearings," he said, "are not necessary—we haven't received a single request for any."

Party Believed Solid

That the bill in its present form, or amended only to clarify details, would have the support of the entire Democratic side was implied in the support it received from Representative Cox, of Georgia, conservative Democrat and member of the reorganization committee.

"Nothing disturbs me a particle in this bill," said Cox, who last year was one of the most outspoken opponents of the reorganization proposal. "This bill," he said, "represents the judgment of the House, uninfluenced from the outside."

Although the bill forbids abolition or transfer of executive departments or designating agencies as departments, Taber asserted that its hidden object "clearly is the creation, by transfer, of functions, of two big departments of Government, one for public works and the other for welfare activities, which will be efficient for propaganda purposes only—not for administration."

Merit Elimination Feared

Among other features of the bill to which the Republicans objected was one section providing that all laws applying to one agency that is consolidated with another agency shall remain in effect "insofar as such laws are not inapplicable."

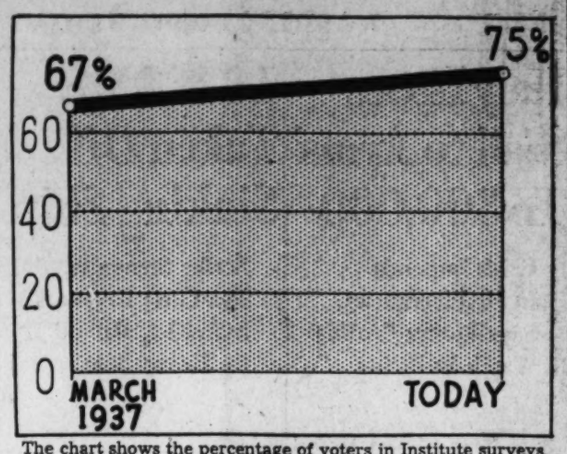
Representative Dirksen maintained that this wording might permit abolition of civil service for persons employed in an agency that was transferred or consolidated with another agency that happened to be outside the merit system.

That part of the bill establishing certain rules for House and Senate treatment of the concurrent resolutions on reorganization proposals was characterized by Taber as "totally invalid."

Besides its sections on reorganizing executive agencies (16, including the General Accounting Office and the Civil Service Commission, are specifically excepted) the bill gives the President authority to appoint six administrative assistants at $10,000 per year.

The Gallup Poll

Supreme Court Curb of Sit-Down Strikes In Line With Public Sentiment



The chart shows the percentage of voters in Institute surveys in the last two years who have voted in favor of curbing sit-down strikes

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 2.—The outlawing of sit-down strikes by the Supreme Court early this week is closely in line with American public sentiment.

GALLUP.

Surveys by the American Institute of Public Opinion in the last two years show that sit-downs were rejected by the court of public opinion many months before the Supreme Court had a chance to act, that there has been a rising trend of public resentment against the sit-down technique, and that opposition is not confined to the higher income groups but is also strong even among the working classes.

These facts are revealed in surveys on the issue: "Do you think sit-down strikes should be made illegal in your State?" This question was first put to voters in March, 1937, and again last month before the Supreme Court handed down its decision.

Opposition Grows

The vote on the two occasions was as follows:

Should sit-down strikes be made illegal in your State?

	Yes	No
March, 1937	67%	33%
Today	75	25

While opposition has been strongest in the upper income group, which votes 85 per cent against sit-downs, the studies find that more than two-thirds of voters in the middle and lower income levels, which include the bulk of the working class, are also opposed.

The chief reason for this opposition, as expressed in thousands of comments made by voters, is that it is "unlawful to seize possession of private property." Many voters also feel that sit-down strikes are undesirable because "they give labor unions a black eye," while others say they are against the principle of force in labor disputes, believing that such disputes are better settled by arbitration.

Party Lines Disregarded

Political sympathies appear to have little influence on a voter's attitude toward sit-downs. Both Democrats and Republicans are against the technique by more than 7 to 3.

The most important sit-down strike in recent years was in Detroit and several other Michigan industrial towns in the spring of 1937. Public resentment in Michigan is said to have cost Gov. Frank Murphy his seat. Today's survey finds that the strongest opposition to sit-downs comes from the East Central area composed of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Ohio. The next highest vote of opposition is in the Midwest farm belt, where earlier Institute studies have shown militant labor unions unpopular with the farmers.

Should Sit-Downs Be Illegal?

	Yes	No
New England	68%	32%
Middle Atlantic	76	24
East Central	80	20
West Central	79	21
South	74	26
Far West	67	33

240 Workers Discharged In Sit-Down Strikes at Newark

Mass Dismissals Are First Under Recent High Court Ruling

By the Associated Press.

Newark, N. J., March 2.—The wholesale discharge of 240 workers who participated in a two-day sit-down strike at the J. E. Mergott Co. was effected today, a company spokesman said, under a recent Supreme Court ruling which declared an employer could not be forced to reinstate persons discharged for sit-down striking.

Emanuel P. Scheck, the spokesman and counsel for the company, said he believed the mass discharge, officially announced this morning, was the first under the court ruling.

Meanwhile, Samuel L. Rothbard, attorney for the C. I. O. in New Jersey, announced that "we are not going to pay any attention to the letters (of dismissal). This is a strike and we are going to win it."

Later today another New Jersey plant, the Archer-Daniels-Midland Co., of Edgewater, linseed oil manufacturers, announced dismissal of between 40 and 50 employes who conducted a sit-down February 21.

Hunter Goodrich, plant manager, said the Supreme Court decision "gives us unmistakable authority to dismiss these men.

About 100 of the plant's 500 employes are on strike in a dispute betwen the C. I. O. and an independent union over which is the authorized collective bargaining agent.

The Mergott company strikers, members of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee (C. I. O.), took over the plant last Thursday in protest of what Scheck termed dismissal of 10 women workers the company charged had "wilfully and deliberately embarked on a slowdown campaign."

Scheck said the sit-downers started their strike at 8 a. m. on February 23 and left the plant at noon the next day, when they "started picketing and other strike activities." The plant has continued in operation with "between 250 and 300 employes at work," he said.

Perkins Agent Acts to Settle Hotel Strike

Union Discusses City-Wide Walkout After Stalemate

The Labor Department acted yesterday in the hotel strike now affecting the Ambassador and Roger Smith hotels and threatening 11 others here. First steps toward opening negotiations were taken by Howard T. Colvin, Labor Department conciliation commissioner.

After meeting Joseph McGarraghy, attorney for the managers of the 13 hotels, and Samuel Levine, attorney for the union, Colvin announced he would hold a conference with them on the points in dispute.

Negotiations between hotel managers and union leaders ended in stalemate Monday when the union demanded closed shop as article 1 of the agreement. Admitting there were other points of difference, Osgood Roberts, assistant manager of the Mayflower Hotel, said yesterday that the managers were willing to discuss them "if we get back to a basis of orderly negotiations." The demand for a closed shop, he said, was "something they knew at the outset would not be accepted."

Union leaders were in conference most of the afternoon, laying plans for extending the strike, according to Union Vice President James McNamara.

"Sentiment in all the hotels is very strong for a general walkout," Sidney Schlesinger, Levine's partner, said last night. The strike was called by the local units of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes International Alliance and the Bartenders League of America.

Plans for setting up soup kitchens for the families of strikers and all other preparations for a city-wide walkout have been made, according to Schlesinger.

Meanwhile, officials of the Ambassador Hotel, where the strike started Tuesday afternoon, and the Roger Smith Hotel, where employes walked out on Wednesday, declared that both hotels were still running smoothly. "Our new men are constantly improving," said Russell A. Conn, manager of the Ambassador.

Baker Convicted Of Killing Man Who Fired Him

William Fleming Johnson, colored, 22, bakery worker, yesterday was convicted in District Court of the first degree murder of George Scandalis, 40, of 472 H street, foreman of a bakery at 476 L street southwest, December 18.

Witnesses testified Johnson went to the bakery and shot Scandalis 45 minutes after the latter had discharged him.

Attorneys J. Frank O'Brien and John E. Chadwick sought to show Johnson fired in self-defense.

Comdr. Ledbetter's Widow Is Killed In 9-Story Fall

Mrs. Harriet Ledbetter, widow of Lieut. Comdr. Penlie B. Ledbetter, Navy surgeon, plunged nine stories to death yesterday from her room on the ninth floor of a San Francisco hotel, according to the International News Service.

Although the sill of the window from which she fell was sufficiently low to permit an accidental fall, police were investigating the possibility of suicide. Her husband died by his own hand ten years ago.

Mrs. Ledbetter is survived by three children.

Alberta French Denied Part In Custody of Heiress Child

Judge Hears Mother Called Unfit; Ex-Husband, Grandmother Share Girl Who Inherited Brewer's Fortune

Chicago, March 2. — (I.N.S.).—After hearing sensational testimony, in which she was accused as unfit, Judge Rudolph Desort today refused to permit Mrs. Alberta Lieber Gray French, 29, any part of the custody of her heiress-daughter, Alberta Gray, 7.

The judge awarded custody of the child for nine months of the year to Mrs. French's former husband, William Buckingham Gray, 51, socially prominent Chicago real estate dealer, and during the spring and summer vacations to Mrs. French's mother, Mrs. Meda Lieber, of New York.

Mrs. Lieber is the widow of Albert Lieber, millionaire Indianapolis brewer, who left $250,000 of his estate to little Alberta. At Christmas, Gray and the child's grandmother are to divide custody.

Mrs. French, who was divorced by Gray on a charge of desertion three years ago, now is married to James French, wealthy oil man of Oil City, Pa.

In Gray's fight for custody, he told how he, who had been a sedate bachelor, was unable to get along after his marriage with his ardent, red-haired bride of 21.

He said she was capable of drinking a gallon of gin at the time of their marriage, that she was dissatisfied with his romantic attentions, called him an "old fogey," and turned to other men. Once, he said, she joined the wife of a family friend in proposing a temporary exchange of husbands.

Lehigh Valley's Debt Proposal Approved by ICC

The Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday approved the Lehigh Valley Railroad's proposed plan to readjust its debt by reducing the interest on outstanding indebtedness, extending maturities of bonds and of nearly $8,000,000 in bank loans and $1,111,000 of loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The road proposed the plan to avert a costly reorganization under section 77 of the Federal bankruptcy act. The debt readjustment proposals have already been approved by a large number of affected security holders.

Dies Investigating Bund, Communists

Chairman Dies (Democrat), Texas, said yesterday the recent German-American bund and communist meetings in New York were being investigated by the House committee on un-American activities.

Dies said the work was being conducted by a special squad of trained investigators under the direction of a former Justice Department attorney. He said the inquiry would cover the Silver Shirts "and every Nazi and Fascist organization."

D.C. Policeman Tells of Gaming House Visits

Says Officials Did Not Know About His Investigation

With a policeman as principal witness against them, four men were ordered held to the Grand Jury yesterday after a preliminary hearing before Police Court Judge Walter J. Casey, on charges of setting up a gaming table.

Pvt. Willard A. Fiefield, who said it was his first gambling case "in 20 years on the force," told the court that on "three or four visits" he observed card playing and dice games. He admitted participating in a rummy game, "but not for money."

The defendants were arrested on warrants sworn to by Sergt. W. T. Murphy, Ninth Precinct, December 14. The establishment is in the 1400 block H street northeast. The suspects gave their names as Chester Scala, Robert Sherwood Howard Seals and Bernard F. Harper.

Sergt. Murphy testified that when he entered the place there was no evidence of gambling but that Fiefield was there in civilian clothes.

When Fiefield was called to the stand, he declared he visited the place in order "to make a case." He stated, however, the operators knew him to be a policeman and that no police department officials had knowledge of his investigation. He told the court that he knew Sergt. Murphy was coming to the place and "I wanted him to see me."

Defense Counsel T. Edward O'Connell asked Fiefield was it not a fact that he obtained warrants against the establishment because of a threat of trial board action from a superior officer. Fiefield denied this.

Records at the office of United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage show that three of yesterday's defendants—Seal, Harper and Sherwood—had been arraigned before the Commissioner on similar charges last Monday. The cases were continued for two weeks and bail was set at $1,500 each. The charges, according to the records, were placed following a raid on the H street establishment February 25.

Judge Casey held the men with the statement: "The only thing I am convinced of is that there was gambling there."

Curran Acquits Susan J. Gelder In Traffic Death

Mrs. Susan J. Gelder, 22, was acquitted of a negligent homicide charge on which she previously had been convicted yesterday by the directed verdict of Police Court Judge Curran.

Mrs. Gelder, who lives at 2325 Fifteenth street northwest, was convicted in the traffic death of Vincent J. Casey, a passenger in her machine when it collided with another. She charged error in the original information drawn against her.

300,000 Hail Pacelli as Pius XII After Shortest Election in History

No Changes Foreseen in Papal Policies

Pontiff Expected To Further Aims Of Predecessor

on the departing throng just as his predecessor—the "humble lover of humanity"—had frequently done. He then retired to his own first-floor apartment, shunning the pontifical splendor of rooms prepared for him on another floor.

Its task completed less than 25 hours after it convened, the conclave came to a n end at 7:15 o'clock this evening (1:15 p. m. E. S. T.).

The 61 cardinals, including three from the United States, filed into the presence of Pope Pius XII and for the second time individually performed the "Adoratia"—the act of homage and obeisance to their new sovereign, kneeling before him and kissing his hand.

The first "adoratia" was performed this afternoon in the solemn surroundings of the frescoed Eistine Chapel immediately after Eugenio Pacelli was chosen Pope by at least a two-thirds vote of the assembled prelates.

Visited U. S. in 1936.

The cardinals began emerging from the brief "imprisonment" of the conclave at 8:30 p. m. They dispersed to their various Rome apartments after leaving the scene where they had just accorded the supreme churchly rulership to a man who for the second time in Catholic history rises from the role of papal secretary of state to that of Pope.

Through his secretary, George Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago, let it be known he was "extremely delighted" over the election of his "dear friend" and was "living the happiest day of his life."

William Henry Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, dean of the American hierarchy, was described by friends as being "extremely happy over the election."

Similar sentiments were expressed by the third United States prelate, Denis Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia.

The last Vatican state secretary to assume the pontificate was Clement IX who was elected and crowned in 1667. The conclave of 1903 elected Cardinal Rampolla Del Tindaro, secretary of state under Leo XIII, but this selection was vetoed by the Emperor of Austria which country, together with France and Spain, held the veto power until it was abolished by Pope Pius X.

Another precedent shattered by the election of Eugenio Pacelli was the fact that never before had a cardinal so chosen visited the new world. Cardinal Pacelli traveled in the United States in 1936 and there his renown as a diplomat and church leader was enhanced by his conversations with President Roosevelt and other American leaders.

The Rome-born Pacelli went into the conclave yesterday with at least 36 votes assured for his name on the first ballot, five less than the 41 required for a two-thirds majority.

He emerged the new Pope after only the third ballot had been taken.

Pacelli, moreover, was virtually named by Pius XI as the man the late Pope would like to have succeed him. Pius XI often referred to his secretary of state, who had much to do with formulating the policy of resisting totalitarian and Communist attacks upon the church, as "our worthy collaborator and continuator."

After receiving the obeisance of the cardinals, the governor of the Vatican and the marshal of the conclave, the new Pontiff retired for the night for a much-needed rest following the most eventful day of his life.

The august coronation ceremony, at which amid ritualistic spendor Pius XII will receive the triple tiara of St. Peter's, was understood to have been tentatively scheduled for Sunday, March 12. There were some indications however, the coronation may be held this coming Sunday, March 5.

"We Have a Pontiff"

Tomorrow at 10:30 a. m., the cardinals, attired in their purple vestments, will reassemble in the Sistine Chapel to take their third and final oath of fealty. They will chant the exalted "Te Deum" which will officially close the formalities of an election that is world-wide in significance.

The sweeping spectacle enacted in the expansive St. Peter's square by the rippling ocean of packed humanity reached its apex at 6:24 p. m. when the new Pontiff appeared on the balcony. Just a few minutes before the white-robed Pope emerged, the great crowd in tense silence heard an announcement over loudspeakers by the Cardinal Deacon Caccia Dominiono who proclaimed in Latin:

"I announce to you a great joy. We have a Pontiff, the Most Eminent Cardinal Pacelli who takes the name of Pius XII.

For the first time in history the name of the new Pope as well as the previous tidings that a Pontiff had been chosen were broadcast to the world by radio over the Vatican's station. The bells of St. Peter's chimed out a refrain of joy while the world-famed Sistine choir intoned the Hymnal of Jubilation carried throughout Rome by loudspeakers.

The throng joined in the hymnal and then up from the seething square welled cries of "Hail to the new Pope" and "Hail to Pius XII." Men embraced each other in unrestrained happiness, tears streaming down their cheeks. Women and black-frocked priests knelt murmuring fervent prayers. Children, scarcely able to comprehend the historic significance of the moment, rejoiced with their elders.

So tremendous was the flowing movement of the multitude straining toward St. Peter's loggia that the pressure threatened several times to burst the bounds of military cordons composed of hundreds of Italian Carabinieri and Blackshirt militia guards.

It was exactly 54 minutes from the time the white smoke curled up from the Sistine Chapel's chimney-top at 5:30 p. m. until the time the newly-elected Pope came to the balcony.

New Pontiff Well Known In Capital

ting Vatican diplomat made a whirlwind tour of the country, traveling by airplane most of the distance. President Roosevelt had been away when the future Pope was here, but the two had luncheon at Hyde Park on November 5, just after the New Deal triumph in the 1936 elections.

On his visit to Hyde Park, the papal diplomat was accompanied by Joseph P. Kennedy, now Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and Frank C. Walker, former director of the National Emergency Council, both Catholics.

"I enjoyed my visit greatly," the tall prelate told reporters on leaving. "It was a great opportunity to meet the President and his truly American family."

There was considerable speculation after the Hyde Park visit; that there should be was inevitable. It was reported that the two men discussed a resumption of diplomatic relations between the United States and the Papacy, which would involve the assignment of a Papal nuncio to Washington and of an ambassador to Vatican City. However, what the President and his visitor from Rome actually did talk about was never revealed.

In the course of his tour, the future successor to St. Peter saw most of the members of the American heirarchy, including the late Cardinal Hayes, of New York; Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston; Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, and Cardinal Mundelein, of Chicago. Two years previously, at the Eucharistic Congress in Buenos Aires, he met the two South American princes of the church—Cardinal Lame, of Brazil, and Cardinal Copello, of Argentina.

The view was expressed here yesterday that these American cardinals, together with Cardinal Villeneuve, of Canada, had a great deal to do with the election of Eugenio Pacelli as Pope.

First Secretary Elevated

The Most Rev. Amleto G. Ciognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, recalled yesterday that Cardinal Pacelli was the first papal secretary of state in nearly three centuries to be elevated to Pope.

One of the new Pontiff's early tasks will be to name an American cardinal to succeed the late Cardinal Hayes. In that connection, the suggestion was heard yesterday that he might name two, giving the United States five in all.

Remove Crepe

When the crowds outside of St. Peter's in Rome yesterday saw the plume of smoke that meant a Pope had been elected, they cried "C'e il Papa!" (There is a Pope).

Here the event was observed in symbolism. Within a minute after the radio flash was heard, students at Georgetown University were removing the mourning crepe that shrouded Healy Hall. The crepe that was entwined with the papal flag also was removed. The same thing happened at Catholic University, at the Apostolic Mission house at 1811 Baltimore street, and at all the Catholic churches.

There was a Pope; the interregnum was over.

In the statements issued by high-ranking Catholic prelates there was a note of joy that the new head of the church should be a man who had visited America and familiarized himself with her ways.

Archbishop Curley said in Baltimore that "our Nation and the world are fortunate."

Recalling the new Pope's visit in 1936, Archbishop Curley said "he came to know our country at first hand. He admires America and thinks American."

"He was one of the most brilliant members of the entire college of cardinals. His holiness is a linguist beyond compare. He speaks seven languages, including English, fluently.

"Two years ago the new Pope visited the archdiocese. He knelt in prayer in the sanctuary of the old Baltimore Cathedral, which his predecessor, now of happy memory, raised to the dignity of a basilica. Our Nation and the world are fortunate in the selection of so worthy a successor of the 'Pope of Peace.'"

The Right Rev. Patrick J. McCormick, vice rector of the Catholic University of America, issued the following statement:

"As a pontifical institution, the Catholic University rejoices over the news that His Eminence, Cardinal Pacelli, has been elected Pope and assumes the name of Pius XII. From our personal acquaintance and from official transactions we feel that our university is not only well known to the new Pope but very close to his heart.

"His recent visit is still fresh in our minds, and we especially rejoice that one who knows us so intimately has now become our Chief Shepherd. The Catholic world will rejoice that another Apostle of Peace will speak to mankind with the same spirit as did his illustrious predecessor."

Otner statements follow:

The Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown University:

"The election of Cardinal Pacelli to the supreme pontificate brings a special joy and gratification to Georgetown University. On October 22, 1936, we had the unusual privilege of welcoming the then Papal secretary of state to Georgetown and presenting him with the highest honor the university can extend in the form of an honorary degree. As Cardinal Pacelli, now Pope Pius XII, is the only Pope in 1900 years who has visited the United States that event is an outstanding landmark in the history of Georgetown.

"We are confident that both the Catholic Church and the whole world may face the uncertain future with the firm conviction that there is now in the papacy a sovereign Pontiff who is not only a great scholar, a great statesman and a great diplomat but a great churchman who cherishes both admiration and affection for the people of the United States."

Walsh's Comment

The Rev. Edmund A. W. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University:

"It was my personal privilege to have served under Cardinal Pacelli in certain negotiations in recent years and I know that his election at this time is evidence of what we Catholics believe is the guidance of Almighty God in the choice of a new Pontiff. Thoroughly familiar as he is with all the great problems now facing humanity, he brings to them not only the qualities of a diplomat, but the broad understanding and personal sympathy of a man accustomed to viewing all things in a spiritual light."

The Right Rev. Michael J. Ready, general secretary, National Catholic Welfare Conference:

"The election of Cardinal Pacelli is most gratifying to us in the United States in view of his personal knowledge of our country. He is the first Pope ever to visit this country and during that visit he demonstrated his liking for the American way of doing things. Pius XII's career as a churchman has been brilliant throughout the years. He is first of all a man who is deeply religious. Knowing the world and its problems, he will bring to society the vigorous truth that moral qualities alone can insure peace and justice. Undoubtedly his pontificate will be outstanding in every way."

Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, commenting on the election informally in response to a request at his press conference said, "It is naturally a matter of satisfaction and pleasure to learn of the recent election of the Pope."

Popular Urge Elected Pope, Says Walpole

Writer Feels Crowd Influenced Choice Of New Pontiff

Walpole

next signal from the Papal chimney was to be at 5:30 p. m.—white smoke if the Pope was elected, otherwise no smoke at all.

It has been for many elections the unusual thing that the new Pope should be announced in the evening. Moreover, this was the first day of voting in the conclave, and I felt so strongly that nothing would occur tonight that I very nearly left the square.

Decided to Wait

I was held there partly by the beauty of the late afternoon and partly by the vast crowd that began to pour into the square. It seemed to be curious that this evening, long before the shops were closed, such masses of people should be hurrying on every street, while this morning, a more likely time for the announcement, had procured a much smaller crowd. And so, although much against my will, I waited.

As the crowd increased, I found myself pushed forward toward St. Peter's steps, and at last was tightly wedged in a great crowd of priests close to the line held by soldiers.

Just before 5:30 I looked up to the sky, which was of incredible beauty, very faintly blue with a three-quarter moon riding it in lonely silver majesty.

Symbolic Background

The great facade of St. Peter's catches at this hour, when it is a fine evening, that patina which has something of the quality of silk and the color of amber. Against these faint colors the row of statues that mounts the collonades was brilliant, and all the figures seemed to be looking eagerly toward St. Peter's.

I describe this impression of color and light, because it will always seem to be a symbolic background for the events that were to follow.

I did not feel it to be so lovely because I knew what was about to happen—I was sure, indeed, that nothing would happen.

I was wrong. Exactly as 5:30 o'clock was reached, a little puff of something came from the chimney like fumes from a cigarette.

I stared at this as it vanished into the sky and, as the first part of the smoke this morning had seemed to me to be so white, I thought that this, too, perhaps meant another non-agreement.

But no black smoke followed it!

There was a curious hestiation in the crowd. They all stared, and they all doubted.

"There is a New Pope!"

Close beside me and pressing in on me was a group of young American priests, very young and very ardent. One of them suddenly in a voice high and cracked with excitement cried: "There is a new Pope!" and at that same instant all faces on every side of me seemed to be aware that this was so.

Then happiness broke loose. And an odd thing that I shall never forget was that instantly Cardinal Pacelli was in the minds of everyone.

The young Americans began saying to each other: "Oh, I hope it's Pacelli; don't you hope it's Pacelli?" And I heard Pacelli's name spoken with Italian, French, German intonations on every side. The only other name that I heard was that of Cardinal Dalla Costa.

Many said tht it must be Pacelli because no other cardinal would be likely to be elected on the very first day of voting. But there was, of course, great uncertainty, and I realized now, perhaps more strongly than at any other time in this fortnight how heavily had weighed upon the minds and souls of these young priests and these townspeople and folk from the country, the haunting possibility that some Pope might be elected other than the Pope that they wished for.

Gandhi to Begin Fast 'Unto Death' For Social Reform

Rajkot, India, March 2 (U.P.)—Mahatma Gandhi had a last meal of fruits and goat's milk tonight before beginning tomorrow a fast "unto death" in protest of an unfilled promise by Prince Thakore, Rajkot Province ruler, in connection with social reform.

"Even if it means the loss of my life, which, after all, at the age of 70 has no insurance value, I should be most willing to give it in order to secure due performance of a sacred promise. God gave me this remedy to end the agony of Rajkot subjects."

Nazis Assail, Democracies Hail New Pope

Shaw Calls Election 'Punch in the Nose For Totalitarians'

London, March 2.—Election of Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli as Pope Pius XII was applauded tonight in Great Britain and France, where it was regarded as a severe blow to the dictatorships, while Nazi Germany described him as "a representative of a morbid generation of dying upper bourgeoisie."

"The political enemy of National Socialist Germany," was the description applied to the new Pontiff in Berlin in a brochure issued before the election by the Nazi Party.

"Pacelli is responsible for the gruff attitude of the Vatican toward the Rome-Berlin axis. He hopes to save his political system through dependence upon the Western democracies."

The angry reception given in Germany to the choice of the Sacred College of Cardinals, indicating continued Vatican-Nazi tension and difficulties, was in sharp contrast to the exhuberant reaction in Britain, France and other European countries.

George Bernard Shaw, British author, described Cardinal Pacelli's election as "a punch in the nose for the totalitarians."

Viscount Cecil, president of the League of Nations Union, said the choice could be interpreted as a victory for the "liberal side" of the conclave of cardinals, which is anti-totalitarian.

"From what I know of the new Pope's work I regard his election as most desirable, although I did not expect it in the least," Lord Cecil said.

"Very Proper," Says Shaw

Shaw said the cardinals had made a "very proper political gesture, at least if it is true that the Fascist powers forbade the election.

"I think the idea was that the Holy Roman Empire (Austria and its ancient allies) had a voice in the election of the Pope which was supposed to have been expressed by barring certain candidates, including Cardinal Pacelli who presumably was opposed from Vienna—namely, by Hitler," Shaw said.

Asked if he believed the election would influence world peace, Shaw said:

"No, I do not think it will have any particular influence but the fact is that the world has become a world of bullying gestures, so I think it is quite well that the church should have made a counter-gesture with a punch on the nose."

In Catholic France there was widespread rejoicing over the election of Cardinal Pacelli and the French government, which always found the new Pope's foreign policies while secretary of state in close alignment with the so-called democratic bloc, was particularly pleased.

Most of France's 30,000,000 Catholics were convinced that the six French Cardinals participating in the conclave had cast their votes for Cardinal Pacelli on all three ballots.

In Berlin German government officials refused immediate comment on the elections but Nazi leaders indicated the Reich's "extreme annoyance" probably would be expressed.

"Of Super-Refined Race"

Editorilas warned that if friendly relations between the Vatican and Germany were to be achieved the new Pontiff must be one who would limit his leadership solely to the spiritual field.

The Nazi party brochure was entitled "The Men Around the Pope" and characterized him as a man of "overripe intelligence from a sharp-nerved. super-refined race which endows him with political skill.

"But Pacelli lacks the gift of making swift decisions and of the spontaneous grasping of political situations, which he often attempts to replace through trips of political activity. Fundamentally he remains a representative of a morbid generation of dying upper bourgeoisie.

"Pacelli innerly is insecure and incapable of dealing with a great opponent. His religiousness is, much to the sorrow of Catholics, more and more subversed to the political role he plays.

"He is comparatively indifferent to reforms and the religious schooling of the masses."

Pius XII Likes Obscurity of Monastic Life

Inevitable Rise Is Opposed to His Asceticism, Modesty

Following is the first of two dispatches on the life of Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, now Pope Pius XII. The second will be published tomorrow.

By Ralph Forte.

Copyright, 1939, by the United Press.

Vatican City, March 2.—If Pope Pius XII had been permitted to pursue his preferences he would today be garbed in the rough brown costume of an insignificant monk offering up simple prayers for another Pope, instead of himself wearing the silken papal robes and receiving the veneration of Catholicism's princes.

But no organization could permit such indulgence in a bent for humility by a man of Eugenio Pacelli's talents. His rise in the church has been as inevitable as it has been opposed to his natural instinct for personal obscurity, the asceticism which lies on his gaunt and magnetic but placid face, and the sincere modesty which causes him to shrink from honors.

His expression of preference for the monastic life was made in 1932, two years after he had succeeded to the difficult office of Cardinal Gasparri, the papal secretary of state.

It was then that Cardinal Pacelli began to see he was expected to be a canute against the rising tide of international crises.

No Mere "Holy Man"

The pious man who would have been a monk is no mere "holy man." He was a worthy successor to his patron, Gasparri, whose tutelage in diplomacy he has improved with experience, study and natural brilliance. His skill in diplomacy is enhanced by a gift for eloquence based on great learning.

Politically, he has lent his weight to the church's opposition to communism, and his prayer for peace at Lourdes in 1935, when he decried "the superstition of race and blood," was a forerunner of the church's more recent denunciation of Nazi-Fascist racial theories.

The new Pope has a zest for travel which showed itself during his month's visit to the United States in October, 1936, when he traveled 7,000 miles, spending five days in a chartered airplane.

The Roman-born Pope came from a family of middle class income which, nevertheless, was of the so-called "black" nobility, holding the titles of nobles of Acquapendente and of St. Angelo in Vado. Its devotion to the Holy See extended far back into Vatican history.

Grandfather Papal Official

Pacelli's grandfather, Marcantonio, was from 1851 to 1870 under-secretary of the interior of the Papal states under Pope Pius IX. It was in 1870 the temporal power of the Church expired, the Papal states ended and Rome became the Italian capital. His father was Filippo Pacelli, dean of the College of Consistorial Advocates.

Vatican honor has come to other members of the Pacelli family. His only brother, Francesco, rendered such service in the reestablishment of peace between the Vatican and Italy that Pope Pius XI made him a marquis in 1929. Three nephews are attorneys for the Vatican.

The boy Pacelli was first a student under nuns in Rome, then studied in government schools and at 18 entered the school of diplomacy at the pontifical academy, which graduated him six years later.

Pacelli was ordained a priest in 1899 and celebrated his first mass in the Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. Soon afterward he was inducted in the Honly Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs.

Attainments Attracted Gasparri

It was there that his scholarly attainments attracted the attention of Cardinal Gasparri, who was then secretary of the congregation. Gasparri directed Pacelli to quit his post as professor of canon law in the Pontifical Institute of the Apollinare and give all his time to the congregation.

So in the congregation, which he never was to leave, Pacelli became a minutante (copyist), undersecretary and finally, under Pope Benedict XV, successor to his patron, Gasparri.

The outbreak of the World War gave Pacelli new opportunity for display of his talents and launched him on the road of foreign service for the Holy See. Benedict XV consecrated him titular Archbishop of Sardi on May 13, 1917, and then sent him as nuncio to Munich, the seat of much diplomatic negotiation between the warring powers.

The peace proposals by which Pope Benedict hoped to end the disastrous war were entrusted to Pacelli.

His serenity in the face of attack saved him from assassiniation in Munich when, in one of the putsches which preceded establishment of the Weimar republic, a group of men invaded his residence and threatened him with revolvers. His poise was disconcerting and they left.

Negotiated Concordats

In the after-war days he succeeded in negotiating a series of concordats with Germany and Prussia and in June, 1920, he was transferred to Berlin as Papal nuncio. Five years later he was accredited to the Prussian government, with which he negotiated an important concordat signed in 1929.

Pope Pius XI called Pacelli back to Rome after 12 years in Germany, elevated him to the purple in the consistory of December, 1929, and gratified the aging Cardinal Gasparri by turning over to his protege the church's most important post, that which Gasparri had tutored him for, Papal secretary of state.

His work in this post was particularly arduous, for the church was troubled by developments throughout the world—in Nazi Germany, in Mexico, in Soviet Russia, and more recently in Spain and Italy itself.

This work entailed much travel and though his body is frail, the new Pope has such energy that he carried on without difficulty. He takes regular physical exercise, and has a room equipped as a gymnasium which he refers to as "the training camp."

Cardinal Pacelli's first visit to the New World was in 1934, when he went to Buenos Aires as papal legate to the International Eucharistic Congress.

He has certain links with the United States through honors which have been heaped upon him. Thus he was named cardinal protector of the Pantifical Association of the Holy Childhood, which has headquarters in Pittsburgh, and holds similar office in the Sisters of St. Mary of the Third Order of St. Francis, whose mother house is in St. Louis. He is also canonical patron and protector of the Congregation of Sisters of the Poor Child Jesus, whose American mother house is at Parkersburg, W. Va.

Cardinal Pacelli became camerlengo of the Holy Roman Church in 1935, a position which made him head of the Sacred College in the period between the death of Pope Pius XI and his own election.

PiusXII Forbidden To Accept Post At Catholic U.

Pope Pius XII, who until yesterday was Cardinal Pacelli, told on his visit here in 1936 how he almost became a teacher at the Catholic University of America. In a speech at that institution, he said:

"As I stand here in your midst, there comes to mind a recollection of my younger years when, at the invitation of the lamented former rector, Bishop Shahan, I was about to become a member of your staff of professors and to bring to the students of the New World a knowledge of one of the noblest products of the human mind, Roman law.

"When I realize that only the fatherly prohibition of the saintly Pontiff, Pius X, kept me from accepting such an agreeable invitation, you will understand how this place, which was about to become for me a second home by adoption, does not seem entirely strange now that I am its guest. . . ."

proximate £1,250,000,000 ($5,875,000,000), which is unprecedented for peace time. The exact total is supposed to remain a state secret until Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exechequer, opens his budget in Parliament on April 18.

The figure of 1,750 as the first line strength of the home air forces does not mean that there are not additional planes in reserve to replace those that crack up in warfare. Exactly how many are held in reserve is an official secret, but it is known the ideal objective striven for at one time was two planes in reserve for every one in the front line.

If this objective be achieved, Britain will have a grand total of 5,250 planes at home, by March 31.

Papal Nuncio Declares Pius Knows World

Says Knowledge Gained As Legate to Late Pope Will Serve Him Well

The following statement by His Excellency, the Most Rev. Amleto Giovanni Cicognani, Apostolic Delegate to the United States, was issued yesterday on the election of the Pope:

On the election of such a beloved churchman as Cardinal Pacelli to the throne of St. Peter, our first word must be one of prayerful gratitude to Divine Providence.

From the first moment of his reign, Pius XII is able to envision the special necessities of the entire world in relation to his duties as shepherd of the Church and father of Christendom.

As secretary of state, the new pontiff enjoyed the rare privilege of close association with Pius XI of holy memory. On several occasions he served the late holy father as personal legate to many nations. Because of his expert skill in many languages he gained an exceptionally intimate knowledge of the qualities, the worth, and the needs of many peoples. His reputation as a renowned scholar of theology and canon law is well known. His career in diplomacy has been brilliant. His priestly piety and paternal, kindly manner, as well as the rare gifts of mind for which the new pontiff is universally known, are evidences of a noble character fashioned by nature and divine grace. These precious endowments now become the heritage of the world.

We might say that Pius XI was in some way inspired when he allowed his beloved Secretary of State to visit this country in the fall of 1936. The new pontiff, Pius XII, was so eager to learn personally as much as possible about the American people during the few weeks he remained here that his travelings to every section of the United States were done for the most part by airplane. Pius XII was enthusiastic about what he saw in this country and commented frequently on the great vitality of this Nation. We recall his words of farewell in which he expressed his admiration for the people and institutions of the United States. We were impressed by the profusion and excellency of the parish churches and the educational and charitable organization of the Church here.

Because of my position in the United States, I have been in daily contact with Pius XII in his capacity as Secretary of State and I know from his letters how very much he cared for and was interested in the spiritual welfare of the citizens of this Nation.

I know that I may express to His Holiness the joy of the people of the United States in his election and the deep affection in which he is held here. I bespeak the prayers of the good people of the United States for his peace and happiness through a pontificate which, we trust in God's goodness, will enrich society with the enduring blessings of justice and charity.

Chevy Chase Man Has Pen New Pope Used in Capital

A pen which Pope Pius XII used to sign his name in the guest book of the National Press Club is in the possession of Russel T. Edwards, of Chevy Chase, Md.

Edwards, a magazine writer, was one of 400 men who gathered in the Press Club October 22, 1936, to break bread with Cardinal Pacelli, then secretary of state for the Vatican. In the course of the luncheon, the papal diplomat signed the guest book.

Afterward, as the crowd filed out, Edwards picked up the pen, thinking that the man who had used it might some day become Pope. He said last night that he would have it framed and would present it to the club.

Scores Logan Plea That Arms Aid Be Given Britain, France

he declared. "America will fight to defend herself, but America wants no war. Secondly, America will have no entangling alliances, no commitments, no understandings or agreements, by which we may be taken into the vortex of a war or into the disputes of Europe."

Meanwhile, as the House began consideration of a half billion dollar Army appropriation, the largest in peace-time history, it received a warning from Chairman Snyder (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, of the House Army funds subcommittee that as soon as the bill now before the Senate becomes law "very sizable additional amounts" will be asked for additional weapons in a supplemental Army supply bill.

Representative Luther A. Johnson (Democrat), of Texas, a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, took the floor declaring that war had been only been made "more imminent" by the appeasement policy toward dictator nations.

"Fearlessness Needed

"The imminence of war today," he said, "is partly attributable to a lack of firmness of the democracies of the world in meeting the demands of the dictators. Firmness, fairness and fearlessness are required by the United States today in its dealings with other governments."

As the Senate adjourned last night, Majority Leader Barkley failed in an attempt to secure a limitation on debate. Speeches already scheduled will delay passage of the defense until sometime next week. Once the tap is turned off on the oratory, speedy enactment of the measure by an overwhelming margin is expected.

Senator Logan urged repeal of the neutrality act, declaring "neutrality predetermined by law" is a "snare and a delusion."

"In my judgment," he stated, "the effect of our neutrality act was to give the green light to nations ruled by dictators to move against democracies. . . . The very fact that the United States has served notice on all nations that it will provide an adequate Army and Navy for the common defense has eased the tension in Europe, and the dictators do not seem nearly so anxious to attack the democracies as they appeared to be a few days ago.

"The bare suspicion on the part of the dictators that the United States was not as strong for neutrality as they had been led to believe has caused them to pause."

Against Sending Soldiers

Senators Walsh and Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, questioned Logan at length during his speech. Clark asked if the latter favored sending soldiers to aid France and England to protect their empires. This, Logan emphatically denied, stating that he would not send soldiers abroad except in self-defense, adding:

"England and France are a part of our protection against the aggression of the dictators. I would furnish them the things they need so they could whip those dictators and take the job off our hands. That is as far as I would do."

Senator Walsh declared that in lending financial aid and moral support, we would be following the same course we pursued prior to 1917. "If we take that first step we will most certainly take the second step—namely, taking up arms," he added.

Logan countered with the statement that England and France do not need our manpower, only our aid in rearming. He declared that whether or not President Roosevelt ever said they were our first line of defense, "we know that it is true that they are."

Opponents Hold Floor

With passage of the bill assured, most of the speeches in the Senate have been from opponents of Administration foreign policy. Senator Reed (Republican), of Kansas, declared that he opposed any national defense program based on the thought we have "any business at all in the boundary disputes of Europe, of Asia, or of Africa."

Senator Johnson read at length from President Roosevelt's speeches on international relations. After praising the President's earlier addresses, he lashed into those made since the ascendency of the totalitarian states to power in Europe. Referring to Mr. Roosevelt's recent declaration that there were methods short of war but stronger than words which could be used in combatting aggressors, Johnson shouted:

"That could mean only one thing. Sanctions! Sanctions! . . . Talk about bombing cities. Talk about the horrors of war—there isn't any horror on earth like sanctions that deny the very food they need to little children and mothers who haven't done a wrong to anyone on earth."

Materials Exchange Planned

Meanwhile the House Military Affairs Committee, considering legislation to provide for reserve stocks of strategic materials not produced in quantity in this country, heard that the State Department was negotiating with an unnamed foreign government on the possibility of exchanging such materials for goods of which we have an excess. Dr. Herbert Feis, economic advisor to the State Department, said they were about to begin similar negotiations with another foreign country.

3-Year Broadcast Licenses Sought

Minimum broadcasting licenses of three years—the present maximum—were proposed yesterday in a bill introduced, in the House by Representative McLeod (Republican), of Michigan. Licenses at present expire every six months. His purpose, McLeod said, is to remove the fear among broadcasters of political reprisals.

Economy Bloc Demands Cut in Spending As Move in Business Appeasement Drive

Economy

and reading his statement in a low, drawling voice, he told reporters he spoke only for himself—"a very humble senator, without influence or affairs."

Another statement elaborating Harrison's views on taxes and possibly advocating the removal of some business levies believed having a deterring effect on recovery, will follow today.

The grey Mississippian, who missed being Senate majority leader by one vote last session, and has since used his influence against heavy spending or high taxes, declared flatly against Administration proposals to lift the debt limit from $45,000,000,000 to $50,000,000,000. He said he would reluctantly prefer an increase in taxes to lifting the debt limit.

He said the Government's fiscal picture "must be carefully scanned, and that doesn't mean next year, but now—and it should be done through clear vision, and not through a colored lens."

Harrison pointed to budget provision for more than $10,000,000,000 in the next fiscal year, and "the cold suggestion in t' budget message of a deficit that will amount to $3,500,000,000."

"We have a national debt of $40,000,000,000 and a guaranteed underwritten debt of $5,000,000,000, he said. "The present law fixed the national debt limit at $45,000,000,000. With mounting expenditures and recurring deficits, it is inevitable that that limit will be reached about the first of July, 1940. Something must be done now to meet this serious situation."

Harrison said Congress, if it continues to spend, must choose between increasing the legal debt limit or raising taxes. To do the former, he said, might bring the Treasury near the "danger" mark, affecting Government bonds. To do the latter, he said, "would act as a deterrent to the revival of business, to the increased employment of people, and would handicap the Government's effort to increase the national income." The only alternative, he asserted, "is to begin immediately a radical and substantial cut in Government expenditures."

Harrison said he appreciated the difficulty of "cutting"—that members of Congress are under constant pressure from constituents to vote more money.

Risk Political Preferment

"But this time, when the country's welfare is absolutely at stake, I think members should risk political preferment."

He said that "if everyone connected with the operation of the Government, whether in the executive or legislative departments, will realize the serious fiscal situation confronting us, and counsel together and co-operate in mapping out a plan, and unflinchingly without political consideration work toward that end, we can accomplish results that will bring hope and encouragement to our people and financial stability to our Government."

He concluded that with unsettled world conditions and rumors of war "American statesmanship demands that the credit of the United States be preserved and our own house be placed in order."

Harrison was assailing the spending theories of Chairman Marriner Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, but he mentioned him only once by name—to deny the President has adopted the Eccles theory.

Asked if he would include the President in the joint House and Senate conference for reducing expenditures, he said he "wouldn't mind the President being in it."

"Every element of the party, the purged as well as the unpurged, should get together—that is one of the ways to move to an end."

Asked how the "radical" reduction could be made, he said a 10 per cent horizontal reduction on everything but fixed Government charges "has been discussed at a number of conferences." He said he would make an even greater cut. Questioned on the $150,000,000 relief deficiency appropriation the President insists on, he said he voted against it before, and will do so again.

Fiscal Position Safe

"As reflected in the interest and principal on bonds—the fiscal position is all right from that standpoint," he said. "But I don't think we have to reach the danger point so far as the National debt is concerned, to stop, look and listen.

"I don't want to see this country go into bankruptcy. If the debt is continually increased, bonds are bound to be affected. And if they are affected, the national structure will be gone, that's all."

Harrison was asked if he thought the $80,000,000,000 national income goal of the President could be reached by curtailing expenditures, and he said he thought that the only way.

"If we restore confidence to business in this country—get them moving again in a serene calm way, by not increasing the national debt and taking away deterrent taxes—I think we will see a tremendous increase in national income, in revenues and in employment."

Barkley Takey By Surprise

Commenting on the Harrison statement, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, said he considered it "timely." Senate Majority Leader Barkley, evidently taken by surprise by the statement, said he favored any conference "that might result in improving conditions, but I'd like to know a little more about it."

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, said he was in "thorough accord with any movement for economy" and Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, said he hoped the move "will lead to economy in Government and restoration of business confidence."

Senator Glass, meanwhile, took issue with Morgenthau's plea for extension of the Administration's monetary powers by declaring "the best opinion of 55 outstanding economists from the leading universities of the country" were opposed to continuing the President's dollar devaluation authority.

"I'm utterly opposed to giving the President or anybody else these powers," said Glass. "I'm opposed to letting Congress or anyone else take us on this road of further degrading our currency."

Flourishing some papers, the Virginian said "I've got here German marks that used to be worth $46,000 and they are not worth wiping your nose on now."

Glass said he would be for continued operation of the stabilization fund only because "if we turned it into the Treasury it would be spent pretty soon."

Senator Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said he couldn't mind extending the stabilization fund if it were only $200,000,000. When Taft asked whether the fund might be used to aid a foreign nation in time of war, Morgenthau said such a move would never be made without consultation of Congress.

Committee May Let ICC Settle Rates

Committee Witnesses Express Satisfaction With Present Setup

By the Associated Press.

The House Interstate Commerce Committee indicated yesterday a disposition to leave to the ICC the problem of complaints from some areas that railroad rates are discriminatory.

The committee has been considering proposals for legislative action on adjustment of rates.

A parade of witnesses testified before the committee yesterday that the States and organizations they represented were satisfied to apply to the ICC for adjustment of any discriminatory rates.

Chairman Lea (Democrat), of California, said he planned to complete taking of testimony today. Representatives Bulwinkle (Democrat), of North Carolina, and Mapes (Republican), of Michigan, said the committee evidently was of a mind to hear witnesses remaining on the docket and then conclude the hearings without action.

Mapes told newspapermen Congress had established several years ago a precedent for leaving rate adjustments and surcharges to the discretion of the commission.

Chairman Hill (Democrat), Alabama, of a Senate Interstate Commerce sub-committee receiving testimony on the same question said he was anxious to receive further evidence from Middle Western shippers. Referring to rates in certain Middle Western areas, Lea said testimony had show them discriminatory. His committee will resume hearings tomorrow.

Mapes, ranking minority member of the House committee, said he believed the entire hearing was conducted with a view to speeding Interstate Commerce Commission action on freight rates.

"There have been no proposals before the committee which could not be accomplished under the powers now granted the commission," Mapes said.

Women in Careers Defended At Relations Conference

Girls Advised to Forget Worries About Taking Jobs From Men At Parley at Mrs. Shouse's Home

Women have broken through most of the walls that held them back and now must make an attack on "the intangibles," Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse, director of research for the Institute of Women's Professional Relations, declared yesterday at the tenth anniversary celebration of that organization.

Mrs. Woodhouse said she is no longer afraid of what statistics will show, but fears the more subtle drawback—tradition. Older women, she said, do not mind shattering traditions; but "young girls are conservative" and are being hampered by what society expects and thinks of them.

With several score of Washington's leading professional women in attendance, the meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Jouett Shouse, chairman of the institute and author of "Careers for Women." Mrs. David Cushman Coyle, local chairman, presided.

Traditions which must be combatted if women "are to do more than run very hard" to keep from losing ground," according to Mrs. Woodhouse, include the "propaganda" that women are interlopers in business.

"We know there is no difference between the making of candles by our grandmothers and the buying of candles with money knocked out at a typewriter. We were not worried by the so-called Biggers report which said something like 2,900,000 more women had jobs, or wanted jobs than anybody had a right to expect.

"But girls have been really worried. They have been somewhat influenced by the subtle idea that all these wicked women are waiting around to take jobs from 2,900,000 noble men," she said.

The answer to the present day situation, Mrs. Woodhouse asserted, is "a more active interest in public affairs." She praised the fight for jury service being made by women and urged them to be on the alert for legislation designed to halter feminine opportunities.

Bill to Speed Opening Alleys Offered by King

A bill designed to expedite the opening and extension of alleys and minor streets in the District was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee.

The measure seeks to cut from the condemnation law the requirement that benefits shall equal damages and costs.

Central High P.-T.A. Upholds Anderson Ban

Board Member Studies Protests; D. A. R. Action Explained

The Central High School Parent-Teacher Association yesterday voted opposition to the use of the school auditorium by Marian Anderson, colored contralto, in her proposed recital here.

Mrs. Jessie Baylies, president of the association, said: "Inasmuch as we recognize the existence of the dual system of education in the District, we strongly advocate continuance of this procedure."

The case was reopened Wednesday when the Board of Education decided to reconsider its previous action when it barred the use of Central High Auditorium to Miss Anderson, following refusal of the D. A. R. to permit her to perform in Constitution Hall.

Prominent citizens throughout the country as well as in Washington sent letters urging continuation of the fight for Miss Anderson to Charles H. Houston, former member of the Board of Education and now legal counsel of the Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who is chairman of the steering committee of the Marian Anderson Citizens' Committee.

Mayor LaGuardia of New York said:

"Needless to say no hall or theater is too good for Marian Anderson, who is without doubt one of the finest and accomplished singers of our time if not of all time."

Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes stated that he "hoped the Board of Education would reverse its decision" and permit the singer to appear in the high school.

A petition in the singer's behalf containing more than 3,300 names is in the hands of Houston's committee, he stated. Signatures of many prominent Washingtonians have been obtained. These include Representative Kent Keller (Democrat), of Illinois; the Rev. J. Hillman Hollister, pastor of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, and Wilbur La Roe, of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Meanwhile, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, bishop of Washington, sent a letter condemning the action of the D. A. R. and regretting that the officials in charge of Constitution Hall could not have recognized the "superior talents" of Miss Anderson.

Hall Need Stressed

"This incident makes evident the supreme need of having here in Washington a municipal stadium under auspices of the District of Columbia government," he said.

Officials of the Board of Education refused to make statements until action is taken today by the committee on community use of school buildings, of which C. Melvin Sharpe, newly appointed board member, is chairman.

Mr. Sharpe said last night: "I have been deluged with calls from interested parties of both opinions. Sharpe pointed out that he had been in office only 48 hours, and that the problem was too important and complex to be lightly decided.

An "echo meeting" of the Marian Anderson Citizens' Committee, following the Wednesday meeting of the Board of Education, last night made plans to attend the board meeting. Charles H. Houston, presiding, said Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, of Washington Cathedral, was expected to appear before the committee.

The Associated Press reported from Denver, Colo., that Mrs. Henry M. Robert, jr., president general of the D. A. R. in elaborating her organization's refusal to permit Miss Anderson the use of the hall said that the rules governing its use are of long standing and have always been in accordance with the custom prevailing in Washington.

Mrs. Robert declined to comment on the reported resignation of Mrs. Roosevelt from the organization in protest of the Anderson affair.

Scouts Honor Memory of Late March King

The seventh anniversary of the death of John Phillip Sousa, America's beloved composer and director of band music, was observed yesterday with brief ceremonies at his grave in Congressional Cemetery. Wreaths were placed by Boy Scout Troop No. 10, of Washington, and Troop No. 2, of Detroit, Mich. Sousa once was a member of the Detroit troop. A group of his former friends and associates and his 82-year-old sister, Mrs. Catherine M. Varela, attended the ceremonies.

Representative Rudolph G. Tenerowicz, of Michigan, spoke briefly, paying tribute to Sousa's memory.

"Let us ever admire the record of his honorable career, the sterling worth of his character and sincerely revere his sacred memory," said Tenerowicz.

The services concluded with the sounding of "taps" by a United States Marine Corps bugler.

Andrews Seeks White-Collar Exemptions

Would Amend Act To Exclude Workers On Fixed Salaries

By the Associated Press.

Administrator Elmer F. Andrews of the wage-hour division said yesterday he would ask Congress to consider amending the fair labor standards act to exempt high salaried white-collar workers.

He told a press conference he had decided to seek Congressional action, rather than deal with the question by administrative regulations.

Andrews indicated he had in mind workers on fixed monthly or yearly salaries whose working time is flexible.

A bill to exempt from the act white-collar workers earning $1,200 or more annually already has been introduced by Representative Thomas (Democrat), Texas. He said today he would ask the House Labor Committee to hold immediate hearings.

The proposed amendment would specifically exclude newspaper reporters and writers, Thomas said, as well as office workers, bookkeepers and statisticians.

"The purpose of the (wage-hour) act is to stop child labor and prevent sweat-shop working conditions and when you go beyond that into white-collar categories you run into difficulties," Thomas said.

Administration leaders have said privately that they opposed making any changes in the wage-hour act at this session because they feared that, if any were considered, there would be a flood of amendments to exempt or include additional categories of workers.

Petain Named Envoy to Old Pupil, Franco

World War Marshal Is 82; French Close Ports to Loyalists

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 2.—Marshal Henri Philippe Petain, who taught Gen. Franco many years ago at France's War College, was named ambassador to Nationalist Spain today in the hope he would win his former pupil away from Italian and German influence.

The appointment of the 82-year-old World War hero, leader of the defense of Verdun, coincided with a new French effort to bring the 31-month-old civil war to an end with unconditional surrender of the Spanish republicans, so as to speed departure of Franco's Italian legions.

France was co-operating with the nationalists to close her ports to shipments of all supplies to republican territory.

Official nationalist dispatches from Burgos said fresh revolutionary plots had broken out in Spanish republican territory.

Three republican naval commanders were alleged to have been sentenced to death because they "were disgusted with the proposal of government leaders to install offices aboard destroyers."

Other reports made public by Burgos authorities were that three republican political leaders had been shot at Murcia and that anarchists "continued" sacking and burning public buildings in Guadalajara, Murcia and Toledo provinces.

Burgos, Spain, March 2 (AP).—Nationalists reported Gen. Franco soon would loose an offensive against the one-fourth of Spain not yet in nationalist control.

Official reports here said three destroyer commanders had been sentenced to death by republican officials after protesting against suggestions of some loyalist leaders that their ships be kept ready for immediate departure for foreign ports.

Reports here said a "republican committee of urgency" in Murcia was drafting plans for sending war vessels out of Spanish water rather than permit their capture by Franco.

Nationalist dispatches said republican military intelligence service agents had seized 229 persons in Madrid who had advocated surrender of the capital.

Contracts Let For New Morgue, Gallinger Unit

The District Commissioners yesterday awarded contracts to two local firms for the construction of the new District Morgue and new general medical ward building at Gallinger Hospital.

Contract for the new ward building went to Bahen & Wright for $807,861. This project includes construction of a central heating plant for Gallinger Hospital and the District Jail, as well as the ward building.

Lee T. Turner, who submitted a bid for $85,396 for the construction of the morgue was awarded the contract. The morgue will be constructed on Gallinger Hospital grounds.

Oklahoma City Schoolgirl Slain by Fiend

Parents Discover Battered Body; Police Given Clew

Oklahoma City, March 2 (AP).—Haselteen Black, 13-year-old junior high school student, strangled by a cord and brutally clubbed, was found dead in her home tonight.

The girl's body, clad in pajamas and a housecoat, lay in a pool of blood on the dining room floor. Her head was battered and crushed and a white cord was drawn tightly around her throat.

Dr. John Roddy said a preliminary examination showed "no external evidence of rape." He said the girl apparently had been strangled first, then beaten. He fixed the time of her death at about noon.

The girl's stepfather and mother, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Scharber, found the body when they returned home about 6 p. m.

"The front door was locked," Scharber told detectives. "I opened the door with the key and went to the bedroom. In a moment I heard Mrs. Scharber scream:

"'Oh, my baby! Oh, my baby!'"

"I ran into the room and my wife was bending over her."

Mrs. Willis Wilson, who lives in the same block, told police she saw a well-dressed middle-aged man peering into a kitchen window of the girl's home during the day. She was too far away, she said, however, to be able to give a close description of him.

Chest Leaders Again Name Jennings Head

Re-elected President Cites Volunteers' 'Greatest Opportunity'

Coleman Jennings was elected president of the Washington Community Chest yesterday for the second successive year at a meeting of the Chest board of trustees, in the United States Chamber of Commerce, attended by about 100 trustees who represented both agencies and contributors.

In accepting office Jennings said: "The Chest opens up the greatest of all opportunities for those who desire to volunteer for the welfare of their community."

Arthur C. Hellen, attorney, was re-elected vice president; Charles B. Dulcan, sr., president and general manager of the Hecht Co., was named second vice president; Miss Mae Schnurr, of the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, third vice president, and John F. Victory, of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, fourth vice president.

Mrs. Wilson Lee was elected secretary and Dr. Dorothy Boulding Ferrebee, Keith Merrill and H. L. Rust, jr., were elected members-at-large.

Held over for another term are three members-at-large, Mrs. Charles A. Goidsmith, Charles C. Morgan and Frank Lee.

Chauncey G. Parker, jr., general campaign chairman for the fall campaign, spoke on the necessity for building an efficient volunteer campaign.

Welfare Group Supports Grant For Relief Staff

Committee to Ask Commissioners for Additional Funds

A committee representing local family welfare agencies will appear today before the District Commissioners in support of a proposal for a $30,000 deficiency appropriation to double the staff of the public assistance division.

Dorsey W. Hyde, jr., committee chairman, said the PAD staff should be doubled in order to bring the number of relief cases per worker down to the maximum which investigation shows can be efficiently handled.

Burdette G. Lewis, District relief investigator, recognized in his report on local relief that the division's case worker staff was inadequate. Workers have to handle about 190 cases each. The recognized maximum is 100.

The committee consists of representatives of the Bureau of Rehabilitation, American Legion welfare department, Catholic Charities, Family Service Association, welfare department of the Federation of Churches, Jewish Social Service Agency and Traveler's Aid Society. Miss Anne P. Halliday is secretary of the group.

Eight States Bear 80% of Nation's Dire Relief Costs

By the Associated Press.

A Social Security Board official reported yesterday that eight States, comprising about 45 per cent of the country's population, are bearing 80 per cent of its direct relief expenditures.

The statement was made to the Senate Unemployment Committee by Ewan Clague, director of research of the board. He named the States as Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois and California.

Testifying on a bill by Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Caroline, to set up a new Federal relief and public works system, Clague estimated that old-age assistance, expected to cost the States and Federal Government $250,000,000 this year, would cost about $20,000,000 to $34,000,000 more under the Byrnes plan.

Aid to dependent children, Clague said, would cost $30,000,000 to $58,000,000 more and aid to the blind $750,000 to $1,500,000.

Niemoeller Enters Second Confined Year

Berlin, March 2 (AP).—The Rev. Martin Niemoeller, militant Lutheran pastor and World War submarine commander, began his second year in a concentration camp today without any hope of early release.

His parishioners asserted his health was good and his spirit unbroken. All attempts to intercede in his behalf have failed.

Tut Tomb Finder Dies in London

ies which threw new light on obscure pages of ancient history and made Carter widely known as one of the outstanding archaeologists of the twentieth century.

It was during the reign of Tut-Ankh-Amen, some writers have recorded, that Moses led the Israelites through the Red Sea, and the finding of his tomb aroused a popular interest throughout the world.

Carter made his find after patient searching in the valley of the Tombs of the Kings. His excavations brought to light the mummy of the boy king, lying in a nest of three coffins, the innermost of which was of pure gold. Objects in the tomb included inscriptions and drawings.

In contrast to the sturdiness with which as an Egyptolist he faced the privations and hardships of the desert, Carter's early life was marked by long-continued ill health.

Carter was the son of Samuel John Carter, an animal painter.

WPA Spending In February Hit Nine-Month Low

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury reported yesterday that WPA expenditures fell in February to the lowest level in nine months.

The month's WPA expenses amounted to $159,924,793, compared with $185,296,182 in January and $218,970,205 in the record month of December.

In the first eight months of the fiscal year which began last July 1, the Treasury said, the Government spent $5,885,053,916 and took in $3,652,786,320, running up a deficit of $2,232,267,596. In the similar period of the previous year, before the spending program was started, expenses totaling $4,790,793,429 were $930,508,664 in excess of receipts.

The public debt on February 28 reached a new high of $39,858,663,453, which was $2,693,923,137 more than at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Fredericksburg's Marriage License Boom Continues

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 2.—The marriage license business continued to boom here in February when 137 licenses were issued by Clerk Mason H. Willis as compared with 11 during the same month of 1938. The rush on the local bureau began in December after a 48-hour wait law in Maryland and a 72-hour delay in northern Virginia communities went into effect.

Exactly the same number of licenses were issued here during January and February. Couples came from many sections of the Atlantic seaboard and several far Western States.

Snow Accompanies Va. Mercury Drop

By the Associated Press.

The Old Dominion experienced a new touch of winter yesterday as rain turned to snow in many sections under the influence of dropping temperatures.

The fall was light in most sections, but Norfolk, where rain turned to snow at 7 a. m., recalled the record-breaking blizzard of March 2, 1927, after the precipitation continued late into the day.

Richmond had a white cover for a few hours, but the light fall soon disappeared. Other cities reporting light snow included Martinsville, Suffolk, Portsmouth, Petersburg and Newport News. There were flurries at Charlottesville.

Flight to Beat Stork Successful

Boston, Friday, March 3 (U.P.).—Mrs. James G. Tobin, an expectant mother, arrived at East Boston Airport in a chartered American Airliner shortly before 1 a. m. today. Mrs. Tobin, sister-in-law of Mayor Maurice J. Tobin, flew here from Miami, Fla., and was immediately transferred by ambulance to St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

SEC Links Manipulation To British Firm

Suspension Hearing Is Ordered Against Its N. Y. Broker

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission, in an order yesterday, charged Junius A. Richards, a partner of Smith, Barney & Co., New York investment firm, with effective manipulative transactions for a London banking firm.

The commission's order did not involve the Smith-Barney firm, which has headquarters in both New York and Philadelphia. The order called a hearing March 27 to determine whether Richards should be suspended from membership on certain national securities exchanges.

The commission had cause, the order said, to believe that Richards had effected transactions "for persons who he had reason to believe were then violating" the manipulative provisions of the securities exchange act of 1934.

The order charged that Richards had accepted orders in the stock of Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc., from the British investment banking firm of Robert Benson & Co., Ltd.

A commission official said the Benson firm was "one of the four leading British investment banking concerns."

The common stock of Simplicity Pattern, in which the manipulation was alleged to have occurred, is registered on the New York Curb Exchange.

The commission charged that the transactions, beginning August 1, 1938, and continuing until about November 30, 1938, were "for the purpose of creating a false and misleading appearance of active trading in the common stock of Simplicity Pattern Co., Inc."

Ordered to Show Cause

At the time of the transaction, the commission said, Richards had reason to believe that the Benson firm was creating manipulative activity in the stock.

Under the commission's order, Richards must show cause why he should not be suspended, for a period ranging up to 12 months, from membership on the New York Curb Exchange, the New York Stock Exchange, the Baltimore Stock Exchange, the Chicago Stock Exchange, the Chicago Board of Trade, the Boston Stock Exchange and the Philadelphia Stock Exchange.

The commission's allegations were the first involving a foreign concern.

Legion Post Asks Ban on Tolerance Of Bund Meetings

Baltimore, March 2 (AP).—An American Legion post here has asked the State organization to protest officially "against any further tolerance by the American Government or any of its municipalities of any public meeting of the German-American Bund in this Country."

A resolution condemning the recent bund meeting in New York and asked a ban of any such meetings in the future was adopted by the Lord Baltimore Hotel Post No. 100.

The resolution stated members of the post felt "the spirit of free speech, guaranteed by the Constitution . . . was violated at this meeting . . . We ask the department to give this matter immediate attention, and forward protests to our Representatives in Congress, so that proper legislative action may be taken."

Tests Firecracker And Sees Hospital

Cleveland, March 2 (AP).—Raymond Mladek, 21-year-old electrician, found a left-over firecracker at his home today and lighted it to see if it would work. He received treatment at City Hospital for burns on the right thumb.

China Bound to Win, Envoy Johnson Says

Chicago, March 2—(I.N.S.).—Nelson F. Johnson, American Ambassador to China, said today he believed China will win the war with Japan because "450,000,000 people have developed the idea that they do not want to be conquered. The Ambassador and Mrs. Johnson were in Chicago on their way to Montana for a vacation.

Oyster Rockefeller Is a Joy—And a Memory Eased by Soda

New Orleans Dish Named After Oil Man Because of Its Richness, Inez Robb Asserts

By Inez Robb.

Copyright, 1939, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

New Orleans, La., Mar. 2.—If someone will kindly pass the bicarbonate of soda, perhaps I can manage a few hundred words on the romance and beauty of the old South before I succumb, for good and all, to the pangs of indigestion.

INEZ ROBB

To see New Orleans, this bit of the Old World in the New World, through what amounts to a haze of bicarbonate of soda is, in all probability, not to see it at its best. But I am the contented victim of this city's most celebrated art: Its French cuisine—or is it Creole?

To be specific, I have succumbed to one of the noblest gastronomic inventions of the ages, the priceless boon to good, if not better, living which is the inspired invention of New Orleans chefs. In brief, I refer to oysters Rockefeller.

For years I have been warned by friend and foe that to visit New Orleans without eating oysters Rockefeller is synonymous with visiting Rome without seeing St. Peter's, with seeing Paris and not the Arc de Triomphe. But no one told me what to do after eating the things. I wish I knew.

Thing of Joy to Palate

To the eye, the oyster Rockefeller is a rather repellant job, even in the proud view of the native citizen. But to the palate, it is a thing of joy and, I fear, apt to become a lingering memory forever.

The oyster, in its half shell, is covered with some kind of a green paste, whose ingredients are as secret as a maiden's prayer. It is then baked and served on a bed of scalding hot rock salt in a tin pie pan.

To the Northern spy, meaning us Yanks, it has scant appeal when popped before us in any of the little French restaurants that dot New Orleans like the measles. But be warned, it's that first oyster Rockefeller that leads to eventual destruction. Like the first drink, it is the road to ruin.

I think I know why they're called oysters Rockefeller. They're so patently rich that any other name would have done them an injustice.

Pompano in Paper Bag

This, as the name suggests, is pompano cooked in a paper bag. The waiter who brings this offering to the table deftly slits open the heavy paper sack, to reveal pompano swimming in a sauce so rich it should be dedicated to the House of Morgan. It is a dish for the gods, since no mortal can hope to digest its lush caloric content.

Perhaps, if I had been able to restrain myself from eating the paper sack, that last glass of bicarb wouldn't have been obligatory. I have only been able to pause long enough in New Orleans to acquire a case of indigestion that is a tribute to local cookery, to catch a fleeting glimpse of the famous old French quarter, to admire the famous wrought iron grille work on the old buildings, and to make one not too profound observation.

That observation has to do with all the men in checked suits, snap brim hats and pale camel hair coats who do not seem at all like Southern gentlemen to a girl who believes in Rhett Butler.

"They look like New York refugees from the Jimmy Walker regime," I suggested to a cab driver.

"No, lady, this town is full of checked suits when the race track's open," the driver explained.

And now if you'll excuse me, I must have enough time for another Ramos Gin Fizz and a platter of oystres Rockefeller before my plane heads West.

Variety Spices Wilson School Radio Program

Songs, Interview, Drama Presented For Workshop

Tops in entertainment value on anybody's radio program and running all the way, for variety, from an accordion interpretation of "The Road to Mandalay" to a dramatic presentation of a scene from Anthony Trollope's "Barchester Towers," 49 students of Woodrow Wilson High School last night presented the fifth in a series of "Students' Radio Workshop" programs over Station WJSV.

The series, heard every Thursday night during the school year, is produced by students of the 10 senior high schools of the District of Columbia, under the joint sponsorship of Station WJSV and The Washington Post.

Singing "Sons of Wilson," traditional song of Woodrow Wilson High, a mixed chorus introduced a variety program that included the following: "Hail Smiling Morn" and "God Is My Song," by the chorus; "Proudly as the Eagle" and "Who's That A-Calling," sung by a boys' double quartet; "To a Wild Rose," soprano solo by June Baer; Basil Colman's acordion rendition of "The Road to Mandalay;" "Song of the Vagabonds," barytone solo by Jordan Bentley; Chopin's Waltz in E Minor, piano solo by Christine Kelly; and the "Barchester Towers" skit, presented by seven members of the play's cast.

Teacher Interviewed

Regular features of the "Students' Radio Workshop" Thursday night shows are short talks by undergraduate and faculty members of the District high schools. These were combined on last night's program when three Woodrow Wilson students: Norma Seiler, Graham Clark and Jack Lane, interviewed Miss Ruth Kimball, mathematics teachers in charge of the activities of the Woodrow Wilson Alumni Bureau.

Members of the cast presenting the "Barchester Towers" scene were: Rogers Aldritton as Dr. Stanhope; Claire McKensie as Madeline Stanhope Neroni; Cromwell Warner as Bishop Proudie; Ellen Anderson as Mrs. Proudie; Donald Olesen as Francis Arabin; Donald Worth as Obadiah Slope; and Charles Weaver as Bertie Stanhope.

Singers Listed

Members of the singing groups included: June Baer, Elaine Easterson, Myrna Macklin, Irene Sullivan, Joyce Soderstain, Phyllis Peterson, Mary Hitchcock, Margaret Braithwaite, Jeanette Bradley, Elizabeth Gaskins, Vinchenza Spano, Jane Beam, Mija Brejska, Muriel Jenkins, Hatie Rutherford, Edna Braithwaite, Ruth Ferguson, Geneva Gordon, Anne Preston, Mary Rogers, Louise Mann, Louise Young, Elizabeth Reid, Eleanor Mellichamp, Dorothy Beam, Jordan Bentley, Paul Berry, Dick Groverman, George Hollenbeck, Leslie Earp, Albert Pyles, James Marsden, James Shields and Alfred Smith.

The program was produced under the supervision of Mrs. Florence Lumsden, Miss Elizabeth Best and Mrs. Alice Zerwick—members of Woodrow Wilson's English department—and Mrs. Janet W. Torbet, teacher of music. Accompanists of the program's musical selections were Ruth Ferguson and Myrna Macklin.

The sixth "Students' Radio Workshop" show will be presented by students of McKinley High School Thursday evening, March 9, at 7 o'clock, Station WJSV.

Tokyo to Ask 449 Millions More

Tokyo, March 2 (AP).—The Japanese navy disclosed today it would demand 1,830,000,000 yen ($499,000,000) in extra appropriations for the 1939-40 fiscal year and that more than half that amount would be allotted to expansion of Japan's fleet, the world's third largest.

These appropriations presumably are in addition to the 653,000,000 yen ($177,000,000 normal naval appropriations included in the 1939-40 budget, now under consideration in Parliament).

Jewish Congress Drive Opens Here

A drive to enroll members in the American Jewish Congress is under way here, with Lawrence Koenigsberger, local attorney, as chairman. A speakers' bureau is being organized under the direction of Rabbi Harry Silverstone and during the course of the campaign prominent local and nationally known speakers will address organization meetings.

Milton Leinson is secretary of the drive committee and Charles Pilzer is treasurer.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown

Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress presents Adolf Busch and Rudolf Serkin in a recital of music for violin and piano Thursday evening in Coolidge Auditorium. Program: Sonata in F minor (Bach), Sonata in G major, Op. 78 (Brahms), Sonata in C major, Op. 159 (Schubert).

Memories of the Beethoven sonata cycle played last season by Adolf Busch and Rudolf Serkin were evidently fresh in the minds of local concert-goers, who crowded Coolidge Auditorium to overflowing last night at the first of a series of three programs by this admirable pair of collaborators. There is a rapport between these two musicians which makes their interpretations sound as unified as though controlled by a common consciousness, and this illusion is strengthened by their habit of playing from memory with a complete absorption in the music. Their concentration and fervor captivate the attention of listeners and hold it by a sheer force of intensity.

They began their program with Bach's F minor sonata, which they played in the strictly classical style with a fine purity of line. The opening largo, moving with an irresistible and calm nobility, was particularly impressive in a deliberate eloquence free from the slightest tinge of rhetoric, and a comparable power of expression characterized the reading of the adagio. The allegro movements were crisp and sparkling like epigrammatic dialogues.

In the G major sonata of Brahms the restraint of treatment gave way to romantic impulse, and this beautiful poem was read with a lyrical fluency that endowed every phrase with significance. The excitement and fire of the players re-created the music; it was one of those moments when a communicative mood transforms a mere performance into something strange and lovely.

Schubert's curious C major sonata, sometimes called "Grand Fantasia," was treated in still a different way. The capricious and wilful music, alternating between poetic reverie and flight of brilliant virtuosity, was handled like a show-piece touched with genius.

$19,485 Needed To Assure New Symphony Season

With 81.4 per cent of the $111,000 sustaining fund for the 1939-1940 season of the National Symphony Orchestra obtained, officials renewed efforts yesterday to make the campaign a success before the March 15 deadline.

At that time a contract for the new season must be signed with musicians, and unless $19,485 more is raised, money collected must be returned to donors.

Thomas P. Morgan, jr., chairman of the general campaign, urged all public-spirited citizens to come forward with their contributions.

Walter Bruce Howe, secretary of the Symphony Association and chairman of the Government committe said: "The smallest contribution is welcome."

G.O.P. Subjects Labor Secretary To 'Sniping Plot,' Dingell Says

Object Is to Discredit Administration, Michigan Democrat Charges; Thomas Accuses Cabinet Member of 'Sabotage'

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins was the center of a bitter row on Capitol Hill yesterday.

Representative Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan, charged Republicans are subjecting the secretary to a "political sniping plot" in order to discredit the Administration.

His charge was made a day after the House had given control of an emergency fund, voted for wage-hour law administration, to Elmer F. Andrews, administrator, instead of Secretary Perkins.

Dingell also charged the major reason behind impeachment proceedings against Miss Perkins "is political in nature," adding:

"There is a vicious plot, a persecution, against Miss Perkins, and it is being engineered by Republicans."

Representative J. Parnell Thomas (Republican), of New Jersey, who filed the impeachment resolution against the Secretary, came back with a blast charging Miss Perkins with trying to "sabotage the deportation laws of the United States," and trying to protect Harry Bridges, West Coast maritime labor leader, against deportation.

In a new statement filed with the House Judiciary Committee, Thomas charged that Miss Perkins had postponed action in the Bridges case, pending a Supreme Court decision in the Strecker case, as "a scheme or device to protract the stay of Bridges within the United States."

"The Government's victory in the Strecker case," he said, "and the clarification of the law concerning deportation of aliens by the Supreme Court, was the last thing that Miss Perkins actually desired. A final victory by the Government in the Strecker case will be a victory won in spite of the efforts of Miss Perkins."

The Strecker case, involving deportation of an Arkansas restauranteur, is pending on appeal in the Supreme Court.

'Alibi' Challenged In Displacing Of Doris Stevens

Mrs. Burnita Shelton Matthews, former president of the National Association of Women Lawyers, yesterday challenged what she called the Administration's "alibi" for President Roosevelt's designation of Miss Mary Winslow, social worker and former Department of Labor economic analyst, as the United States member of the inter-American Commission of Women, displacing Miss Doris Stevens, its founder and ten-year chairman.

Mrs. Matthews said examination of the sub-committee report adopted Wednesday by the governing board of the Pan American Union, which paved the way toward reorganization of the commission, refuted the Administration view that action at the recent Lima conference had changed its status from "non-official" to official." It has always been official, she contended.

Judge Fay Bentley To Perform First Wedding as Jurist

For the first time in her five years on the bench, Judge Fay Bentley, of Juvenile Court, will perform a marriage ceremony March 18, for Dr. Frederick Lenz, 53, economist, and Dr. Grete Oevel Falk, 39, research director for the Council of Social Agencies.

The couple obtained a marriage license yesterday in District Court and will be married in Judge Bentley's chambers. Dr. Lenz, who lives at the Hotel Benedict, is a former professor at the University of Giessen, now doing research work here. Dr. Falk lives at 1703 New York avenue northwest.

Dog's Vaccination Before Supreme Court

Does the constitution protect a dog from vaccination? That question was placed before the United States Supreme Court yesterday in an appeal by Mabel Jones West, of Birmingham, Ala. The Alabama Supreme Court had said "no."

Swanson Bars Navy Files to Spy Case Court

information and said he was acting on orders from the Secretary of Navy. He was upheld by Federal Judge Ralph Jenney after attorneys' arguments in chambers.

Counsel for Mikhail Gorin, Western representative of the Soviet Intourist Agency, his wife Natasha, and Hafis Salich, Russian-born and former Naval Intelligence agent, sought to show that revelation of the information did not constitute espionage.

Espionage Charged

The three defendants are charged with espionage, for which the maximum penalty is 42 years in prison. Salich was acccused of selling 69 secret Naval Intelligence reports to Gorin for $1,700, for delivery to Moscow.

Defense attorneys earlier had attacked the value of the Naval Intelligence Service as a national defense by objecting to testimony of Lieut. Comdr. Elias Zacharias, district intelligence officer. Judge Jenney ruled that Zacharias' testimony of why Japanese espionage constituted a peril to the United States was improper.

In both rulings Jenney held secret hearings on the arguments.

The closed court sessions followed reading of additional naval reports that touched on romance, narcotics, intrigue and other subjects investigated by the NIB in its quest for Japanese spies.

The jury was exoused until Tuesday.

Reorganization Hearing to Start On Wednesday

Public hearings in a House subcommittee on the Griffenhagen reorganization report will start at 10 a. m. Wednesday, Chairman Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, said yesterday.

The hearings will follow by a day the opening of an inquiry of the proposed $13,000,000 District tax program, over which Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, will preside.

Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, said yesterday that he would try to persuade Kennedy to remain on the House District Committee after he has finished with the District reorganization legislation.

Kennedy had stated he would quit because of other duties and the apparent lack of appreciation of his activities in behalf of the District.

'Upon This Rock!'

All human considerations aside, Catholics believe that the choice of their Sovereign Pontiff is determined by an operation of the Holy Spirit. And as evidence for this they might well cite to the skeptical the elevation, at this hour of grave crisis, of Eugenio Pacelli to the Papal Throne.

For probably not among all their number, which includes men of great learning, men of deep piety, men of vast worldly experience, could the conclavists have found one who seems better equipped for the tremendous responsibilities of the papacy at this historical crossroads. Nor could they have chosen one whose election would have been hailed with such great and sincere rejoicing, both within and without the Church, and everywhere in the world, save among the ruling cliques of Germany and Italy.

Few men have a keener and closer acquaintance with the complex political currents of this troubled world in which we live than Pope Pius XII. His acquaintance with them began as long ago as the Pontificate of Leo XIII, and under the celebrated Cardinal Rampolla, the most gifted diplomatist of his age, under his successors, Gasparri and Merry del Val. The choice must have crystallized in the minds of many, if not most of the cardinals, long before they gathered Wednesday in the Sistine Chapel. For apparently no more than three ballots were necessary to achieve the two-thirds majority. Such a thing had not happened in three centuries.

Nevertheless, the sudden and dramatic close of the conclave, and the still more dramatic announcement by Cardinal Dominioni from the balcony of St. Peter's caught even the most experienced and best informed correspondents by surprise. Despite all his signal qualifications, Cardinal Pacelli had been ruled out of their calculations; partly because the modern precedents were contrary to the election of a Papal Secretary of State, but principally, because it was thought, the cardinals would not venture thus boldly to defy the insolent warnings in the Nazi newspapers, or the audacious innuendoes in the speech by the German Ambassador to the Vatican.

It was well enough known that no member of the conclave, not even excepting the French cardinals, nor the outspoken Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago, would make a Pope less to the taste of the National Socialist fanatics than Cardinal Pacelli, who had been so closely identified with the policies of Pius XI. Not even that vigorous Pontiff had attacked the Nazi idolatries in stronger words than Mgr. Pacelli, as when, for instance, in April, 1935, he said before the pilgrims at Lourdes:

> It matters little whether they mass around the flag of social revolution. They are inspired by a false conception of the world and of life. Whether they are possessed by superstition of race and blood, their philosophy, as that of others, rests upon principles essentially opposed to the Christian faith, and on such principles the Church does not consent to form a compact with them at any price.

And a month earlier he had written to Cardinal Schulte at Cologne:

> If false prophets have been raised, if the Church has been attacked, and if new thought is advanced, seeking to supplant Christ, then the time has come when the Bishop must raise his voic fearlessly to repeat, "Judge ye whether it be right to hearken unto you rather than unto God."

Even worse, perhaps, in the Nazis' eyes was the zeal with which Cardinal Pacelli had worked in the promotion of better relations between the Vatican and republican France. They remembered his several visits to that country, and also the profound welcome given him by the American democracy when he visited the United States in 1936. It is, incidentally, of much more than sentimental significance that Pius XII should be the first Pope whose acquaintance with the American Church has come first hand.

Undoubtedly, the strength of Cardinal Pacelli's candidacy increased in direct proportion to the influences that were as undoubtedly brought to bear against it. Thus the Catholic Church again asserted her independence of secular intimidations, and magnificently reaffirmed her championship of the liberty and dignity of the individual human spirit against the powerful forces that seek its extinction.

Over and above all its other great implications, therefore, the election of Pius XII is of the profoundest significance, in both the spiritual and temporal senses, as the first great setback of the totalitarian tide. Against that tide the Rock of Peter is seen to stand impervious. And whether or not this election may serve to unleash the long-anticipated outburst of Nazi fury against the hapless Catholics of the Reich, and whether or not the German cardinals who voted in the election return to something that may approximate martyrdom, a great and lasting victory has been won for the cause of human liberty.

The Anderson Concert

It is to be hoped that the Committee on Community Use of Buildings, of the Board of Education, will at its meeting today decide in favor of making the facilities of the Central High School auditorium available for a public concert by Marian Anderson. It is further to be hoped that such a reasonable action, if taken, will be promptly confirmed by special session of the board.

In so acting the board would be making a very real concession. It would be reversing a previous decision which was adequately grounded in law and logic. And it would be reversing that decision in the face of a storm of criticism which, consciously or unconsciously, has tended to confuse and exacerbate the actual issue. Nevertheless, the reasons for a reversal of attitude seem compelling.

The Board of Education based its earlier action on two considerations. One of these is the dual school system which is legally established for the District of Columbia. This system carries the implication that a similar division should rule with regard to the utilization of school property for extra-curricular functions. It is not of itself a very strong argument, however, because the concert in question would not be held during school hours, and because the local schools have frequently been used for inter-racial gatherings.

The second, and much more important, consideration, is the commercial character of the projected concert. The fee of $1,750 requested by Miss Anderson necessitates high prices for the seats. It would give the whole affair a strongly commercial flavor which should not be associated with public school property. On this profit-making basis every Government auditorium in Washington, including that at the disposal of Secretary Ickes, would be closed to Miss Anderson or any other professional performer. The same position should be taken by the District schools, particularly since this concert is scheduled for Easter Sunday, when a commercial presentation seems particularly inappropriate.

But the defect in this argument, very properly emphasized by the Howard University Concert Series Committee, is that the school officials have not been consistent in refusing to let school property be commercialized. Three years ago Marian Anderson received a fee of $600 when she sang at the Armstrong High School and two years ago, for another concert at this Negro institution, she received $1,250. Between these honoraria and that now demanded by the artist there is a difference in degree but not in kind.

Doubtless these earlier substantial fees were not disallowed by the Board of Education in 1936 and 1937 because it wished to facilitate the appearance of Miss Anderson in Washington. Unquestionably it is most unfair that the board is now attacked as seeking to exclude this Negro artist when earlier it actually tolerated improper concessions in order to give her a forum here. Certainly there is a point at which the commercialization of school property becomes intolerable, and that point seems to have been exceeded in the present issue. But having accepted a rising scale of charges by Miss Anderson in the past, there is firm basis for the argument that one final compromise with principle should now be made by the board.

This seems the more desirable because of the present tendency to make the major issue, which is one of commercialization, appear as being wholly a racial problem. As would be expected, communists are active in spreading this misrepresentation. On Tuesday of this week the New York Daily Worker, which boasts of its affiliation with the Communist International, editorialized on the subject. Denial of the facilities of Constitution Hall to Miss Anderson, it said, "was eagerly imitated by certain high school officials in Washington who refused to accept a transfer of her concert, thus showing that American democracy is just as alien to them as it is to the D. A. R. reactionaries."

Those who understand the wholly dishonest technique of the Communists will expect an increase in malicious attacks of this character if the Board of Education should take the stand that the evidence presented in behalf of reconsideration is not compelling. But it is not yielding to improper pressure to wish to see this unnecessary issue fairly reconciled. And reconciliation is rendered easier by the precedents referred to above.

It therefore seems desirable for many reasons that the board should authorize the Anderson concert, perhaps stipulating a date other than a Sunday, and at the same time making it clear that henceforth no commercialized performances of any kind will be permitted on any of the property under its control.

The real moral to be drawn from this unfortunate affair is, as we have already noted, the urgent need for a municipal auditorium available to the people of Washington without invidious distinctions of any kind. Making that need more clear was the one constructive aspect of the D. A. R. decision to keep Miss Anderson from singing in Constitution Hall. The dilemma into which that action has forced the Board of Education is the more to be regretted because of the lack of any solid basis for the unfair condemnation this hard-working and public-spirited body has recently received.

Vote Of No Confidence

After an acrimonious debate the House has accepted a Senate amendment to the first deficiency bill which deprives the Department of Labor of control over funds appropriated for administration of the wage-hour law.

There was no consideration of the proposal on its merits. Moreover, there are various precedents to justify giving a departmental division the power to disburse its funds as it sees fit. It was the manner in which the amendment was introduced rather than its substance which precipitated a conflict.

Despite protestations to the contrary, the House vote implied a lack of confidence in Secretary Perkins. Otherwise it is impossible to explain why it approved a transfer of budgetary control from the Department of Labor to a subordinate official just beginning to be acquainted with the duties of his position. The action of the House, taken in conjunction with the recent impeachment resolution, indicates the existence of widespread hostility to Miss Perkins in Congressional circles.

The true reasons for this feeling toward an official whose record of administrative achievement is very highly regarded by those familiar with it, certainly ought to be brought into the open. In justice to Miss Perkins, as well as for the good of the department, there should be an end to personal attacks that tend to divert attention from major issues of an impersonal nature.

It is certainly a most irresponsible proceeding for Congress to set up a virtually independent one-man agency to administer the wage-hour law mainly because it dislikes or distrusts the head of the Department of Labor. If Congressional likes and dislikes were to become a basis for determining the nature and extent of powers vested in Government officials, the executive establishment would soon present a sorry spectacle of confusion and inefficiency.

The dangers of permitting personal bias to color legislative policy is further illustrated by considering another problem that concerns the Department of Labor. That is the proposed shift of the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board, as recommended in Senator Byrnes' relief bill.

It is generally conceded that the Employment Service and the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, now under the Social Security Board, should be brought under unified control. But whether the unifying agency should be the Department of Labor or the Social Security Board is a matter for consideration on broad impersonal lines. What Congress thinks about individual administrators is of slight importance from the long-time viewpoint of efficient administration.

Whenever a majority of Congress believes that important officials cannot be trusted to exercise the powers which naturally and properly devolve upon them, efforts should be directed toward dislodging the official by open attack. Sniping at Government administrators, and undermining their influence by depriving them of power, is almost certain to impair their efficiency without assuring attainment of the end sought.

The Ides Of March

Batting for Harlan Miller yesterday, Senator Taft wondered whether "the doings in Washington have any active relation to the people of the United States."

It is easy to understand this uncertainty. All too often Washington assumes a sense of unreality, particularly apparent to newcomers.

However, the days before the Ides of March are decidedly not those in which unreality is the most outstanding characteristic of Washington. As Senator Taft drops the columnist's pen and reaches for his income tax blanks he will agree, with many of his fellow countrymen, that what occurs in Washington is not pure phantasy.

"An investigator is seeking the cause of a marked decline in the number of marriages." He might consider that it's becoming more difficult every day for a man to support a wife and a government.

"Civilization is under construction!" says a radio orator. Yes, and we're getting dinged tired of this rough detour we're bumping over.

Question Of Psychology

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is an insult to the singer, as well as to those who admire and respect the great Marian Anderson, that she is not permitted to ennoble Constitution Hall or another large auditorium in the city with her splendid art.

I cannot understand the psychology of any group which preaches "Americanism" and denies by its actions the very truth in which it professes to believe. The Daughters of the American Revolution seem to be such a group. Marian Anderson, of course, is as much an American as any of us, but she differs from most of us in that she can, with her song, make life the glorious and noble experience that we little people, descendants of Revolutionary heroes notwithstanding, are often unable even to imagine

We are only preaching our own smallness in denying Miss Anderson the best that we have to offer.

Says No Code Violated

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the colored singer, Marian Anderson, has been quoted correctly by the Associated Press in this morning's Post, it is just as well that this controversy has been started, because it shows some of the work of agitators that is going on in little suspected places.

The singer is quoted as saying that she is "shocked beyonds words to be barred from the Capital of my country." This is absoutely untrue. She is not barred from the Capital. She can come here and sing all she wants to. There are plenty of places where she can sing. She can pitch a tent and sing. Maybe Mrs. Roosevelt will let her sing in the White House. There is no reason she cannot sing from the Capitol steps. But because she has been refused permission to sing in D. A. R. hall and Central High School the issue is now obscured by the claim that she is barred from the Capital. This issue is different from that of Jersey City. There the privilege of free speech was absolutely denied and Mayor Hague makes no bones about it. But that is not true here no matter what the agitators say about it.

If this singer is the great artist and cultured person all her admirers claim she is, one would think she would not insist on intruding in places where it is obvious she is not wanted. No code of any kind has been violated when the owners of D. A. R. hall exercise their right of ownership in denying the use of their hall to those they do not want in it. The School Board is also within their rights for the same reason. Especially when other places are available. But that is not what the agitators want. They are always on the lookout to force an issue.

The racial question in the District of Columbia is rapidly being forced to a head and the colored people here are being exploited by the very ones who claim to be their friends

The colored people of Washington need to have set before them some of the advantages they enjoy here. The press, especially, should set before them the necessity of making no move or doing anything that would slow up the good work that is being done for the colored race in Washington. These people who claim to be such lovers of the colored race are not their best friends. They are being deceived and misled by these self-appointed apostles. If the colored people themselves do not soon wake up they are going to find themselves the victims of a lot of selfish exploiters who do not have the real welfare of the colored race at heart.

This is the real motive back of the Marian Anderson agitation; back of the anti-lynching bill; back of the educational agitation and all the other efforts that are being made to bring about enmity and ill-will between the races.

What Berkeley Did

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Several summers ago while in Berkeley, Calif., a large tea was given in Berkeley's very beautiful International House. The guest artist was Spencer Kennedy, a Negro. His bass voice was superb and he was acclaimed by the numerous guests. Since then he has sung many times on the radio (where his color is not noticeable).

It hardly seems possible that the National Capital should be more provincial than a university in the West. One asks, is it the personality which counts more than the art of the musician? Marian Anderson has a rare voice and possesses artistic interpretation. It is for this reason that her art should be considered foremost.

Praises Mrs. Roosevelt

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In her reported resignation from the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, because of their refusal to rent their auditorium for a concert by the artist Marian Anderson, Mrs. Roosevelt has once more lived up to her reputation as a great American liberal.

It seems that the sum of $1,750 for the concert by the artist is held to be excessive. This fee is far less than is charged by many American and European artists. There is an element of our population that seeks to keep the colored citizen in economic slavery by paying him as little as possible regardless of the value of his service, and also by charging him the most he can be forced to pay for everything he uses.

The passion displayed by those who would keep the Negro down only testifies to the inferiority complex from which they suffer.

Sympathizes With D. A. R.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some time ago I was in Richmond, Va., and, opening the daily paper, found an editorial urging the people to attend a concert by Marian Anderson. I understand that this singer has had large audiences and flattering treatment in other Southern cities.

Nevertheless, I am rather sympathetic with the attitude of the Daughters of the American Revolution and of the school board in refusing Constitution Hall and the auditorium of Central High School for Marian Anderson's appearance in Washington. The South has evolved a modus vivendi, worked out upon the principle of trial and error, which is resulting in increasingly cordial relations between the races and under which the colored people find not only opportunity for expanding culture within their own social circle, but the advantage of a sympathetic attitude upon the part of the majority race.

Here in Washington, organizations ostensibly concerned with the advancement of the colored race are challenging the principle of social separation, and the natural reaction is a defensive attitude, based upon no concessions.

Negroes of discriminating sense should demand that their so-called representatives cease trying to break into white schools and that they should rather lead their own people in a movement to check the vicious colored criminals who range the city, knocking down women, snatching pocketbooks and otherwise engaging in impudence and violence.

Where Sentiments Lie

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Marian Anderson is an exponent of culture. And I refuse to believe that the action of the D. A. R. and the School Board in this celebrated case is a genuine reflection of the sentiments of the people of culture of Washington, as I was born and reared here. I refuse to believe that this action is representative of the sentiments of the Congress or of the President or of the majority of the people of Washington, all of whom the two boards are more or less responsible to.

RICHARD W. GANT.
Washington, Feb. 28.

Surprised By School Board

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The D. A. R. building is tax-exempt as are religious and educational institutions. This tax-exemption is granted on the assumption that such institutions are open to the public on equal terms, for all citizens are "equal under law," as the noble United States Supreme Court testifies on its face.

We citizens and taxpayers of the District of Columbia have to pay a higher tax because of all this untaxed "public" property. When, therefore, a singer like Marian Anderson, whom Toscanini says has a voice that is heard only once in a century, is barred, one wonders whether the Daughters of the American Revolution Hall ought not pay taxes because it is only partly public.

There is a case right now being instituted regarding the District of Columbia Bar Library in the courthouse to compel it to move out because it refuses colored lawyers the same right as white lawyers to use it. Taxpayers paid for this building, its heating, lighting and maintenance. Colored people have to pay equal taxes with white folk. They use the public libraries; why not the courthouse bar library? Colored people, human beings and also taxpayers are granted separate but equal schools and colleges, equal representation on the police and firemen's forces as well as clerical governmental positions in the District of Columbia. Why not?

I was not surprised at the D. A. R., which I have always maintained is a private group of elderly ladies who have no other claim to distinction than that they are descendents of some people who did real public service several generations ago. But when the Board of Education prohibited her from the use of a school auditorium, I was dumbfounded. Has our board also gone Nazi? Is it suffering a bad case of Dies-jitters? ARISTOTLE.
Washington, Feb. 19.

Anderson And Gigli

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The refusal of Constitution Hall and a high school auditorium to Marian Anderson is the more deplorable, as each foreign artist is given the possibility to appear there even if he behaves in the most scandalous manner, as has recently the Italian tenor Gigli. Mr. Gigli has been known as a hater of democracy for many years. Reports from Berlin showed that he used to enter the stage in Berlin with the Nazi salute "Heil Hitler." Having gone back to his native Italy with thousands and thousands of good American dollars, he besmears our country.

To him, as they have done and will do to Nazi artists, the D. A. R. willingly rent their hall, while to one of the greatest living artists, a native of this country, whom every American can be proud of, the hall is refused because her skin is dark. Miss Anderson is not responsible for her color. She has always behaved as a true American, increasing the glory of our country here and abroad. It seems to me tolerance is rapidly losing in our country, influenced by foreign propaganda.

The Post Impressionist

'Parfit, Gentle Knight'

ONE OF MY FIRST newspaper assignments in Washington was an interview with Ambassador Hirosi Saito at the Japanese Embassy. He was not at all difficult to see, and such courtesy as was given me in his house has not been exceeded elsewhere. No formality or swank, just a bright, smiling little man who was genuinely interested in his visitor, and who interviewed me much more than I interviewed him, and who when the interview was over knew all about me and was trying to suggest ways for me to get along in the big town to which I had come only a little while before.

And now I recall, I did not write an interview with Saito at all, but with Mrs. Saito. The story was printed in The Post. She showed me her lovely garden and told me that her favorite flowers were the American Beauty rose and the orchid and that American ice cream is the best in the world. Mrs. Saito rejoiced also that ice cream was so easy to get, "because drug stores are every place." She said that drug stores are not so numerous in Japan, and that the things they sell are mostly from America.

But it was this remark by Ambassador Saito that made the greatest impression on me that June afternoon at the Japanese Embassy:

"My country will never employ armed force against China."

His face glowed with deep emotion as he said the words. His belief amounted to faith. His vision of a peaceful Asia was clear and logical. He could see no reason for the Chinese and Japanese to kill each other.

Even then Saito seemed very frail, and he must have known what was the matter with him, that continued residence in a climate such as Washington's would endanger his life. Yet even after he had been relieved of his post as Ambassador, and could have returned to Japan as Minister of Foreign Affairs, he stayed on in Washington, perhaps hoping that through his friendships—and everyone knows how many they were—he could aid understanding between his country and the United States.

Think how deeply injured he must have been by the Panay incident, and by the train of tragic events that preceded and followed it in China. This gentle soul, himself of Samurai blood, disciple and exponent of the chivalry of bushido, was hurt beyond remedy by circumstances created by the acts of Japanese militarists.

Loving his own country with deep fervor, and giving America an affection such as many of her own sons could not even understand, he was torn as with steel claws by events in China that caused Japan to be disliked in America. He knew the other side of the Japanese picture, the gentler folk, both humble and of high degree, the dainty lady of the palace and the rough-handed peasant villager, who wrote hokku to a cherry blossom, to a birdling fallen from the nest, or the first streak of dawn, and who cherished the precept, "Even as you slay your foeman, forget not to love him."

To Saito, as he told me, there was so much to love and admire in both the Japanese and American peoples, it was a cruel pity even to think that they might ever be enemies. And the same with China, which he honored as the ancient mother of Japanese culture and as one of the great nations of all history.

But when the Panay was sunk, and there was nothing else to do, and nothing for him to say, he and Mrs. Saito canceled all social engagements, and he told the newspaper boys:

"I am in the doghouse now."

I wish he might have returned to Japan and worked among the great men of his nation for peace and amity in Asia and the world. But perhaps it was better that he did not, because power diplomacy was in the ascendant, and still is, both in Asia and Europe—and European dictators are reaching out for alliances with a strong-arm Japan.

Among my few cherished possessions is Hirosi Saito's book, "Japan's Policies and Purposes," which he gave me two years ago. I wish everyone could read Saito's final chapter, entitled, "The Cherry Blossoms," which he opens with an appreciation of the description of spring in the prologue to "The Canterbury Tales," and compares the Canterbury pilgrimage to the pilgrimage of tourists to Washington each spring to see the Japanese cherry trees in bloom around the Tidal Basin.

"There is in Japan a time-honored saying:

'As among flowers the cherry is queen,
So among men the Samurai is lord.'

"The spirit of the Samurai ennobles manhood, and the essence of that spirit is peculiarly and gracefully emulated by the cherry blossoms . . . One of the knightly virtues is honor . . . Our expression, 'to be ashamed before one's own mind,' or 'to keep the mind's mirror unclouded'—makes our conception of honor explicit. A perfect knight must ever keep account with himself. Once his sense of honor is violated or lost, then:

. . . 'Tis a relief to die;
Death's but a sure retreat from infamy.'

Fair Enough

Night Club Idea

IF I WERE fixing to set a trap at the New York World's Fair I would call it Police Headquarters, stick a couple of those green lights out in front and try to get enjoined by the mayor or the police commissioner. Maybe they would seize me for impersonating a police station, and if so I would get some loud, cheap lawyer to habeas corpus the joint. The publicity would put me over for one season, which would be enough.

We would have no cuff in our plant. We would be strictly sleeveless, and all the debs, both male and female, the broken-down society tramps of both sexes, the tablecloth authors and playwrights, the men-about-town and the whole class of moochers of the night side of New York would be barred.

We would announce that all customers would have to lift their eight, and that would scare them off, but just for a gag we would get up circulars of all the celebrities who are commonly mentioned in the columns dealing with saloon society, using their pictures wherever possible, and hang them on the walls of headquarters, offering a reward of $50 for proof that any one of them ever bought a drink. That would be a safe offer.

The Mooching Is Just Terrible

THEIR KIND of trade brings publicity, to be sure, but what good is publicity if the free-loaders shove the cash customers off into the alcoves or crowd them out entirely? I just don't see how some of our night-side operators get by with the mooching that goes on today. The scion trade, the bum society trade and the celebrity trade all create a large bundle of clippings in the course of a year, but I am not Mr. Zero and you can have that business. I will take the tourist and the honest local yokel out for 10 bucks worth of Saturday night.

I would treat them all right, too. I wouldn't kid anybody. I would announce that our regular $1.50 dinner could probably be duplicated for from 35 to 50 cents in any one of a thousand beaneries around town and admit that the margin was the jailer's graft or lug—a familiar practice in most American institutions of this kind. Food is really a nuisance in saloon-type restaurants, and maybe after a while we would get down to the point of leaving a papier-mache sandwich at each plate or just painting a portrait of a slice of ham on each plate.

Scrambled Eggs At 1 In Morning!

WHEN PEOPLE go out rejoicing, they want gin, rum rye, Scotch and maybe a few layers of brandy for the small hours. We would keep some cheap champagne on hand, too, in case of couples out celebrating their fifteenth or twentieth wedding anniversaries with the in-laws and business customers.

I took a friend into Jack White's one night, and when this friend ordered scrambled eggs about 1 in the morning there was the damnedest row in the kitchen that you ever did hear. The cook and the dishwasher poked their heads in to see what the guy looked like who was ordering food, and when the eggs finally came the busboy was two jumps ahead of the waiter with a whole tray of bicarb, bromo, bismuth and chewing gum.

I hear we have a place in town called the Fire House, but the Police Station would top that. For my part I have always wanted one of those comfortable police sergeant's chairs, canted somewhat back, with big side arms. We would have that kind of chair all around.

Uniformed Sergeant To Book Customers

WE WOULD have a desk inside the entrance, with a sergeant on duty in uniform to formally book the customers before turning them over to the turnkeys to be ushered to their cells. Naturally, they wouldn't have to give their square names, and, of course, we wouldn't search them unless that became necessary along toward closing time. I don't think it would be a wise idea to have bunks in the cells. But we would hire famous retired cops—like, say, Dick Enright or Ed Mulrooney if they could be had—to be around in their old uniforms, and maybe some old Cannons or Petermen to wait on table. Paroled guys would have to be out, because they can get picked up for working where liquor is served.

I don't see why we couldn't call our joint Police Headquarters. After all, how many Lido Goldfarbs have there been in this country and Rivieras and Versailleses and Villa Venices and White Houses and Palaces? What about the Macfadden-Deauville and the Dempsey-Vanderbilt?

What is so sacred about the name of Police Headquarters?

A Word-Picture Of The New Pope

By Edmund A. Walsh, S. J.

Georgetown University Vice President, Regent of the School of Foreign Service.

THE UNUSUAL SPEED with which the conclave elected a new Pope bears a deep and possibly an historic significance. The election of Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli to the Supreme Pontificate and his choice of the name of Pius XII can not fail to convey certain important connotations to an expectant world. That the conclave lasted but one day is in itself a striking contrast to certain previous experiences, notably that of the year 1271, at Viterbo, which lasted over two years and nine months and gave rise to the new legislation which expedited all Papal elections for the future and became law at the second council of Lyons in 1274. The unprecedented speed with which the conclave registered its choice before God and man proclaims to the world that Eugenio Pacelli, in their opinion, is the man sent by God to rule the Church and to lend succor, grace and understanding to secular powers in the uncertain future that lies ahead.

It has sometimes been popular to speak of a "political" Pope and a "spiritual" Pope. Writers have sought to indicate the outstanding characteristic of a Sovereign Pontiff by the broad distinction implied in those two words. Without suggesting that the word "political" meant a politician in the chair of St. Peter, the term has been used to describe Pontiffs who dealt very directly and often with fundamental issues in the realm of the foreign relations of the Papacy. The designation "spiritual," on the other hand, rather identified Pontiffs whose disposition and activities leaned more toward internal discipline of the Church, the strengthening of its religious life and dogma and the increase of devotion and asceticism.

THOUGH THESE two functions and duties are inseparable from the universal charge imposed on every father of Christiandom, and have been exercised by all pontiffs, the distinction has its value in recording the different phases of papal activity throughout the centuries.

It would appear that the special needs of the times resulted yesterday in the election of a Pope who combines within his own person the two important qualities of statesmanship and deep concern for the spiritual life of the Church. Even during the arduous labors demanded of a Papal secretary of state, Cardinal Pacelli had found time for a series of deeply spiritual pronouncements, addresses and publications which testify to his inherent spiritual sensibility and clearness of vision with respect to things of the soul.

His address at the Eucharistic Congress at Buenos Aires a few years ago is an outstanding example of moral grandeur. His many priestly activities in Rome bear witness to a strength of character which did not permit the heavy preoccupations of a diplomat's life to minimize his essential vocation as a spiritual leader. Hence, if his past life be fair indication of his future activities, the internal life of the Catholic Church will receive still further stimulus and impetus under his guidance.

Veteran in Problems Of International Import

THAT THE SECOND characteristic of statesmanship is present in the new Pontiff no one will deny. For a quarter of a century Eugenio Pacelli has been entrusted by the Holy See with duties of the highest importance in the field of international relations. As assistant secretary of state in the Pontificate of Benedict XV he was early initiated into the actual problems and working of Papal diplomacy. Then, as first nuncio to Germany, in the post-war period, he occupied one of the most delicate positions in Europe and was instrumental in concluding the concordat with a new Germany. It was during this period that I made my first acquaintance with the present Pius XII, while he was still nuncio in Munich, in the winter of 1924. Arriving in Germany directly from Soviet Russia on business connected with urgent questions of relief affecting both Russia and Germany, I was ushered, one bitter cold night, into the drawing room of the Papal nunciature.

As I remember the occasion, there was no fire because of the almost universal lack of fuel. But the room was warmed by the very definite friendliness and personality of the occupant. This courteous and considerate treatment of each new visitor is one of the salient human qualities of the new Pontiff. There is always a courteous smile and an unostentatious but impressive dignity in the carriage of the tall and slim figure. The face is one at which men would turn to gaze, even in the public streets.

The eyes have the look of one whose gaze is fixed on more substantial realities than those appearing on the surface of things. Those who had the privilege of hearing Cardinal Pacelli speak here in Washington in 1936, all commented on this aspect of his looks and agreed that his ascetic countenance and the long crimson robe symbolized the age-long tradition and function of the oldest spiritual power in the world.

Rock of Stability In Disturbed World

IF ONE ADDS to these gifts of nature and of grace the further accomplishments achieved by hard labor, there results a pontiff in whom the world may well expect a rock of stability and an anchor of hope. No ruler of any modern state will have had a more providential preparation to grapple with the elements that make for confusion in Europe and throughout the world. The present Pope, in addition, is an accomplished linguist. Without so much as a note before him, he addressed a crowded meeting of newspaper correspondents here in Washington at the National Press Club with a clearness and accuracy that left a lasting impression. At considerable personal fatigue—and with the danger always present in travel by air—Cardinal Pacelli flew from New York to the furthermost bounds of the American continent and returned by air in order to have ocular evidence of the vast reaches of the United States and to know something of the geographical extent of this continent. His conference at that time with President Roosevelt brought face to face two men in whose hands now reposes much of the future destiny of world peace. The Cardinal's trips to other parts of the world—to South America, to Central Europe and other important areas—furnished him that knowledge and that personal understanding which will give to his judgment the seal and weight of mature experience.

One of Most Acute Dangers Removed

THE END of the ghastly civil war in Spain opens up new possibilities for peace in Europe by removing one of the most acute dangers. So, the election of yesterday may well open up new and hopeful vistas for the exercise of that restraining influence and broad sympathy which the Vatican may soon be called upon to wield in the council of rulers. In their desperate attempt to recapture order and insure international peace, the governments of the world will find not only a competent and experienced diplomat on the Papal throne, but an exceptional personality endowed by nature and by grace with spiritual perception, broad understanding and a human sympathy that extends to all classes—because, based on the unchanging principles of the Sermon on the Mount, Pius XII will undoubtedly and with impartial justice accord to Caesar the things that are Caesar's but not the things that are God's.

Fortune Survey

By Ernest K. Lindley

New Deal Approved

IF YOU BELIEVE what you hear around Washington, President Roosevelt and his policies have lost the confidence of the country and the New Deal is all "washed up." The Republicans and conservative Democrats have built up such a bear market on Roosevelt that even some of the New Dealers are selling him short.

Now, however, Fortune magazine appears with a survey showing that the President and his policies are approved by 63.5 per cent of the voters who have an opinion on the subject. As less than 6 per cent of all those polled lacked a definite opinion one way or the other, this is an impressive verdict for Mr. Roosevelt. The answer shows also that during the last two months the popularity of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal has increased.

Obviously, somebody is out of touch with the real sentiments of the American people. This column offers no opinion as to the accuracy of the Fortune survey, except to recall that in 1936 it forecast Mr. Roosevelt's majority within 1 per cent. If the Fortune survey is right, the anti-New Deal Democrats from right-wingers such as Senator Byrd down through such "moderates" as John N. Garner either don't know what a majority of the voters really think or are ignoring it. As Mr. Garner, so far as I know, has never pretended to be more than a good practical politician, I assume that he would not knowingly defy the settled opinions of the electorate.

Incorrect Readings Of Public Mind

IF THE FORTUNE survey is even approximately correct, a great many Democrats in Congress have let themselves be stampeded into the anti-Roosevelt camp by trepidations based on incorrect readings of the public mind. The questions asked in this survey were general in character, of course. Most people who approve on the whole of Mr. Roosevelt and his policies disagree with him in various particulars. An overwhelming vote for him is not a demand that Congress act as his "rubber stamp." Neither is it a demand that Congress lend itself to the uses of a "rubber stamp" opposition. It is a warning to the members of Congress, and especially to the Democrats, that they should think twice—or three or four times—before they flout him.

The Fortune survey also shows that, among the voters who now approve of Roosevelt, approximately 58 per cent would vote for him again in 1940, while about 21 per cent say they would not and about 21 per cent are doubtful.

The first figure is roughly 37 per cent of the whole electorate and the others are about 13 per cent each. These returns can be used to show, negatively, that Franklin D. Roosevelt could not win as a third-term candidate unless he received the votes of all those who say now that they do not know whether or not they would vote for him in 1940. But the returns indicate, also, that the "no third term" tradition represents no deep conviction on the part of a great majority of the American people.

Only 13% Disfavor The Third Term

THERE IS NO WAY of knowing, from this survey, how the people who are already against Roosevelt feel about the third-term tradition in the abstract. What it has shown is that only 13 per cent of the voters feel strongly enough about the tradition to indicate that they would vote against Mr. Roosevelt because of it in 1940, and only 13 per cent—for various reasons—are doubtful.

Many hearty Roosevelt supporters of my acquaintance are strongly against a third term—some of them on general principles, some because they want to take the progressive-Democratic movement out from under the shadow of a single personality, some because they believe that a leader of different talents and personality would be better fitted for the task of carrying forward the work Mr. Roosevelt has begun.

Retains Confidence Of Great Majority

YET I HAVE heard many of those same individuals say, when pinned down, that if they had to choose between a third term and the election of a conservative Democrat or the loss of the election to a conservative Republican, they would vote for Mr. Roosevelt again. Probably many of the Roosevelt supporters who say now that they would not vote for him in 1940 would change their minds if the alternatives were less acceptable than those they supposed when they gave their answers to Fortune.

Mr. Roosevelt does not want a third term: of that all of his close associates whom I know are convinced. But he retains the confidence of a great majority of the electorate. Even with the handicap of the third-term tradition he remains the strongest candidate now in sight on the Democratic side. By the spring of 1940 the movement to draft him may be too powerful to be resisted.

Although With Averted Eyes

SIX YEARS AGO a book appeared depicting life in China. Its title was "The House of Exile" and it achieved the honor of becoming a best-seller on the non-fiction lists. Among the chorus of praising critics there was one disgruntled voice who protested that no picture of China could be true which omitted the dirt, smell, neglect and dissolution of that great country.

The critic was Alexander Woollcott and the author of the book was Nora Waln.

Mr. Woollcott was promptly taken to task by a little girl who, from school in Switzerland, set out to put Mr. Woollcott right about the author. The letter she wrote so enchanted Mr. Woollcott that he published it in "While Rome Burns." The readers of that book will, no doubt, remember it:

A Little Girl Defends Homeland

"DEAR MR. WOOLLCOTT:

"I am Nora Waln's daughter. Mummy is not just a pacifist by inheritance. She is one by conviction also. No matter what one does to her, she will not take any action. I am not a birthright Quaker. Both parents have to be one or the child is not. My father is a member of the Church of England but does not go to church. I will probably not be a pacifist. Anyhow I am not one yet. I think you ought to be written to and I am doing it.

"I have read your article. I was born in China and lived nearly all my life there. I have read mummy's book carefully and I do not find any untruth in it. Certainly she does not put everything down. Mummy never mentions nasty things in her conversation. I do not think she concentrates on them in her mind. She may see them but I do not think she could write them. Filth makes her vomit. When she has to pass anything horrid she goes quickly and does not look. If anyone mentions anything not nice, such as blood on the meat platter as my Cousin Brenda did at lunch, mummy is sick right then. Uncle Jim says she has always been like that. I feel that it is naughty of you to write that she shouldn't notice only beauty. Why shouldn't she? If you want something else written then can't you write it yourself?

"But if you write anything bad about China I shall not like it. China is the best country in the world. I have not seen any other place to compare with my birthland. Mai-da's life is told correctly.

"Besides having read your article about mummy, I have read your article about taking a little girl to the theater in February, and I have seen your picture in the Cosmopolitan.

"My conclusion is that you are not a bad man but a too hasty one.

"Yours sincerely,
"MARIE OSLAND-HILL."

New Book Tells About Germany

I REPUBLISH this letter at this time because Nora Waln has written another book, called "Reaching for the Stars." It is a book about present-day Germany. Mrs. Waln went there in June, 1934, with her husband, who had retired from the British civil service in the Far East and wished to study music in music's home. Mrs. Waln lived among Germans, the life of Germans, during the greater part of the Hitler regime to date.

She was not in Germany as a reporter. She did not go out of her way to find out anything. And on the testimony of her little daughter Mrs. Waln is a lady who "when she has to pass anything horrid goes quickly and does not look."

Mrs. Waln is a Quaker, bred in Pennsylvania, one of those gentle people dedicated to the Kingdom of God in this world whose strength of spirit has won them the respect of all mankind.

Mrs. Waln does not believe in violence at all, not even the violence of the word. She loved Germany from the memory of the Germans among whom she lived as a child in Pennsylvania. Her nature and her religion compel her to give offense to no man. She greeted Germans with the Hitler salute because it was the custom of the country where she was a guest. She strove to see only the best. That which was not good and worthy to be praised is recorded in this book only because it intruded itself into her life and hence into a picture luminous with truth.

Damning Document On Hitlerism

ON THE TITLE page of her book she states her standpoint. The words are Goethe's: "Fashions of this world are in continuous change and I would concern myself with things that are abiding."

And therefore, and because of all these things, she has written one of the most beautiful tributes to Germany and one of the most damning documents on Hitlerism that has come from any pen.

She writes almost as a diarist. "Reaching For the Stars" is a picture of domestic life among people whose domestic life in all its forms—in its cleanliness, its family loyalties, its orderliness, its natural discipline and its culture—is admirable.

She is a German scholar familiar with the history, literature and folklore of the country where she is a guest, and in her search to understand the present she constantly reaches into the past.

She has an enormous, imaginative sympathy for people and a tolerance as wide as the world.

The True Germany Causes Nostalgia

NO ONE CAN READ this book without loving Germany better. No one who reads this book can believe, having read it, that Naziism is the final face of Germany. Reading it awakened in me such a nostalgia for the country where I also lived so long and where I have found a few of my best and truest friends that it was almost unbearable. I gave it to a German Jewish emigre, who laid it down, saying: "Yes, that is Germany"—turned away to hide his tears.

Here is a book that contains Hitler youths who are adorable boys; Storm Troopers devoted to a cause and permeated with idealism; officials who are courteous; a picture of the Fuehrer in a moving relationship to simple people.

And here is a book that describes, always in understatement, an appalling terror. The terror is everywhere. The old scholar whom she visits in his little woodland house to discuss with him the builder of the great wall of China had two sons—one fell in the war, the other is in a concentration camp. His father is glad and proud. He thinks that is where his son should be—where all honorable and truth-loving young men of courage must be.

People disappear from the midst of civilized, affectionate little groups and no one hears of them again.

One speaks with one's neighbors "through the flowers"—muffling one's words with the table decorations.

One encounters little open opposition to the regime but an enormous quiet sabotage of it. One sees people being decent in a bootlegged fashion, helping Jews under a regime which makes the Golden Rule a crime except inside the tribe.

Naziism's Duration Seen Overestimated

AND IN THE END one hears a great expression of faith in the German people and in the great role that Germany will yet play in Western civilization.

"Often I have heard it said that Naziism will last 1,000 years. I think that those who speak for it overestimate its duration. The good in this movement will endure. All other elements the German people will discard. They are an educated populace. Their future history will be different from that of the less cultured people on whom barbaric emotionalism is used."

One last thing about this book: Mrs. Waln wrote it in Germany, whose Fuehrer so admired "The House of Exile" that he bought many copies for distribution to his friends. She had no anxiety about her manuscript. She had only three copies, and she posted them separately and, as it happened, from separate places to her various publishers. Not one of the copies ever arrived.

So this book suffered the fate of Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution" and Edna Millay's "Conversation at Midnight." It was destroyed. Every word of it had to be rewritten in England from the notes she had taken.

This was the answer of the German government to one who tried to see the truth, nothing but the truth, with loving eyes.

"Reaching for the Stars," by Nora Waln, is published by Little, Brown & Co.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Cocktail Hour

BETWEEN the dark and the daylight,
When the day has begun to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the cocktail hour.

I HEAR in the lounge and the barroom
The patter of many feet,
And the orders for strange concoctions
With instructions "And not too sweet!"

FROM MY chair I see in the doorway
The shoppers at close of day,
Who must have a little "pick-up"—
And have it without delay.

GRAVE ALICE and laughing Allegra,
And Edith (with tilted hat),
Who say, "Shake another, Emil—
There wasn't a kick in that!"

THEY CHATTER as gay as magpies—
A man hasn't half a show
To get in a comment edgeways
When the girls have had three or so.

THE HORS D'OEUVRES are passed and sampled
At table and bench and bar
By people who eat, but never
Quite know what the darned things are.

A SUDDEN rush for a table—
A fight for a chosen chair—
The rattle of ice in shakers—
The laughter of women fair.

THE GIRLS who drop in from business
As nonchalant as can be,
And put down a drink their fathers
Would choke on in misery.

THE WOMAN with many bundles,
Who unloads 'em with a sigh—
And orders a double brandy—
(Or maybe a triple rye).

THE HURRIED and pale commuters
Outbound for the 5:02 train,
Who drink with amazing swiftness
And order "the same again!"

THE TALK that becomes chaotic,
The debby who says "Just one,"
But gets to her sixth or seventh,
Exclaiming, "Oh, this is fun!"

BY 7, or maybe later,
"Say, where are the phone booths here?"
And then, "I'll be late for dinner—
Got tied up in traffic, dear."

"GOT CAUGHT in the subway, honest" . . .
"They couldn't get any power" . . .
"Detained at the office, honey" . . .

'Upon This Rock!'

All human considerations aside, Catholics believe that the choice of their Sovereign Pontiff is determined by an operation of the Holy Spirit. And as evidence for this they might well cite to the skeptical the elevation, at this hour of grave crisis, of Eugenio Pacelli to the Papal Throne.

For probably not among all their number, which includes men of great learning, men of deep piety, men of vast worldly experience, could the conclavists have found one who seems better equipped for the tremendous responsibilities of the papacy at this historical crossroads. Nor could they have chosen one whose election would have been hailed with such great and sincere rejoicing, both within and without the Church, and everywhere in the world, save among the ruling cliques of Germany and Italy.

Few men have a keener and closer acquaintance with the complex political currents of this troubled world in which we live than Pope Pius XII. His acquaintance with them began as long ago as the Pontificate of Leo XIII, and under the celebrated Cardinal Rampolla, the most gifted diplomatist of his age, under his successors, Gasparri and Merry del Val. The choice must have crystallized in the minds of many, if not most of the cardinals, long before they gathered Wednesday in the Sistine Chapel. For apparently no more than three ballots were necessary to achieve the two-thirds majority. Such a thing had not happened in three centuries.

Nevertheless, the sudden and dramatic close of the conclave, and the still more dramatic announcement by Cardinal Dominioni from the balcony of St. Peter's caught even the most experienced and best informed correspondents by surprise. Despite all his signal qualifications, Cardinal Pacelli had been ruled out of their calculations; partly because the modern precedents were contrary to the election of a Papal Secretary of State, but principally, because it was thought, the cardinals would not venture thus boldly to defy the insolent warnings in the Nazi newspapers, or the audacious innuendoes in the speech by the German Ambassador to the Vatican.

It was well enough known that no member of the conclave, not even excepting the French cardinals, nor the outspoken Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago, would make a Pope less to the taste of the National Socialist fanatics than Cardinal Pacelli, who had been so closely identified with the policies of Pius XI. Not even that vigorous Pontiff had attacked the Nazi idolatries in stronger words than Mgr. Pacelli, as when, for instance, in April, 1935, he said before the pilgrims at Lourdes:

> It matters little whether they mass around the flag of social revolution. They are inspired by a false conception of the world and of life. Whether they are possessed by superstition of race and blood, their philosophy, as that of others, rests upon principles essentially opposed to the Christian faith, and on such principles the Church does not consent to form a compact with them at any price.

And a month earlier he had written to Cardinal Schulte at Cologne:

> If false prophets have been raised, if the Church has been attacked, and if new thought is advanced, seeking to supplant Christ, then the time has come when the Bishop must raise his voic fearlessly to repeat, "Judge ye whether it be right to hearken unto you rather than unto God."

Even worse, perhaps, in the Nazis' eyes was the zeal with which Cardinal Pacelli had worked in the promotion of better relations between the Vatican and republican France. They remembered his several visits to that country, and also the profound welcome given him by the American democracy when he visited the United States in 1936. It is, incidentally, of much more than sentimental significance that Pius XII should be the first Pope whose acquaintance with the American Church has come first hand.

Undoubtedly, the strength of Cardinal Pacelli's candidacy increased in direct proportion to the influences that were as undoubtedly brought to bear against it. Thus the Catholic Church again asserted her independence of secular intimidations, and magnificently reaffirmed her championship of the liberty and dignity of the individual human spirit against the powerful forces that seek its extinction.

Over and above all its other great implications, therefore, the election of Pius XII is of the profoundest significance, in both the spiritual and temporal senses, as the first great setback of the totalitarian tide. Against that tide the Rock of Peter is seen to stand impervious. And whether or not this election may serve to unleash the long-anticipated outburst of Nazi fury against the hapless Catholics of the Reich, and whether or not the German cardinals who voted in the election return to something that may approximate martyrdom, a great and lasting victory has been won for the cause of human liberty.

The Anderson Concert

It is to be hoped that the Committee on Community Use of Buildings, of the Board of Education, will at its meeting today decide in favor of making the facilities of the Central High School auditorium available for a public concert by Marian Anderson. It is further to be hoped that such a reasonable action, if taken, will be promptly confirmed by special session of the board.

In so acting the board would be making a very real concession. It would be reversing a previous decision which was adequately grounded in law and logic. And it would be reversing that decision in the face of a storm of criticism which, consciously or unconsciously, has tended to confuse and exacerbate the actual issue. Nevertheless, the reasons for a reversal of attitude seem compelling.

The Board of Education based its earlier action on two considerations. One of these is the dual school system which is legally established for the District of Columbia. This system carries the implication that a similar division should rule with regard to the utilization of school property for extra-curricular functions. It is not of itself a very strong argument, however, because the concert in question would not be held during school hours, and because the local schools have frequently been used for inter-racial gatherings.

The second, and much more important, consideration, is the commercial character of the projected concert. The fee of $1,750 requested by Miss Anderson necessitates high prices for the seats. It would give the whole affair a strongly commercial flavor which should not be associated with public school property. On this profit-making basis every Government auditorium in Washington, including that at the disposal of Secretary Ickes, would be closed to Miss Anderson or any other professional performer. The same position should be taken by the District schools, particularly since this concert is scheduled for Easter Sunday, when a commercial presentation seems particularly inappropriate.

But the defect in this argument, very properly emphasized by the Howard University Concert Series Committee, is that the school officials have not been consistent in refusing to let school property be commercialized. Three years ago Marian Anderson received a fee of $600 when she sang at the Armstrong High School and two years ago, for another concert at this Negro institution, she received $1,250. Between these honoraria and that now demanded by the artist there is a difference in degree but not in kind.

Doubtless these earlier substantial fees were not disallowed by the Board of Education in 1936 and 1937 because it wished to facilitate the appearance of Miss Anderson in Washington. Unquestionably it is most unfair that the board is now attacked as seeking to exclude this Negro artist when earlier it actually tolerated improper concessions in order to give her a forum here. Certainly there is a point at which the commercialization of school property becomes intolerable, and that point seems to have been exceeded in the present issue. But having accepted a rising scale of charges by Miss Anderson in the past, there is firm basis for the argument that one final compromise with principle should now be made by the board.

This seems the more desirable because of the present tendency to make the major issue, which is one of commercialization, appear as being wholly a racial problem. As would be expected, communists are active in spreading this misrepresentation. On Tuesday of this week the New York Daily Worker, which boasts of its affiliation with the Communist International, editorialized on the subject. Denial of the facilities of Constitution Hall to Miss Anderson, it said, "was eagerly imitated by certain high school officials in Washington who refused to accept a transfer of her concert, thus showing that American democracy is just as alien to them as it is to the D. A. R. reactionaries."

Those who understand the wholly dishonest technique of the Communists will expect an increase in malicious attacks of this character if the Board of Education should take the stand that the evidence presented in behalf of reconsideration is not compelling. But it is not yielding to improper pressure to wish to see this unnecessary issue fairly reconciled. And reconciliation is rendered easier by the precedents referred to above.

It therefore seems desirable for many reasons that the board should authorize the Anderson concert, perhaps stipulating a date other than a Sunday, and at the same time making it clear that henceforth no commercialized performances of any kind will be permitted on any of the property under its control.

The real moral to be drawn from this unfortunate affair is, as we have already noted, the urgent need for a municipal auditorium available to the people of Washington without invidious distinctions of any kind. Making that need more clear was the one constructive aspect of the D. A. R. decision to keep Miss Anderson from singing in Constitution Hall. The dilemma into which that action has forced the Board of Education is the more to be regretted because of the lack of any solid basis for the unfair condemnation this hard-working and public-spirited body has recently received.

Vote Of No Confidence

After an acrimonious debate the House has accepted a Senate amendment to the first deficiency bill which deprives the Department of Labor of control over funds appropriated for administration of the wage-hour law.

There was no consideration of the proposal on its merits. Moreover, there are various precedents to justify giving a departmental division the power to disburse its funds as it sees fit. It was the manner in which the amendment was introduced rather than its substance which precipitated a conflict.

Despite protestations to the contrary, the House vote implied a lack of confidence in Secretary Perkins. Otherwise it is impossible to explain why it approved a transfer of budgetary control from the Department of Labor to a subordinate official just beginning to be acquainted with the duties of his position. The action of the House, taken in conjunction with the recent impeachment resolution, indicates the existence of widespread hostility to Miss Perkins in Congressional circles.

The true reasons for this feeling toward an official whose record of administrative achievement is very highly regarded by those familiar with it, certainly ought to be brought into the open. In justice to Miss Perkins, as well as for the good of the department, there should be an end to personal attacks that tend to divert attention from major issues of an impersonal nature.

It is certainly a most irresponsible proceeding for Congress to set up a virtually independent one-man agency to administer the wage-hour law mainly because it dislikes or distrusts the head of the Department of Labor. If Congressional likes and dislikes were to become a basis for determining the nature and extent of powers vested in Government officials, the executive establishment would soon present a sorry spectacle of confusion and inefficiency.

The dangers of permitting personal bias to color legislative policy is further illustrated by considering another problem that concerns the Department of Labor. That is the proposed shift of the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board, as recommended in Senator Byrnes' relief bill.

It is generally conceded that the Employment Service and the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, now under the Social Security Board, should be brought under unified control. But whether the unifying agency should be the Department of Labor or the Social Security Board is a matter for consideration on broad impersonal lines. What Congress thinks about individual administrators is of slight importance from the long-time viewpoint of efficient administration.

Whenever a majority of Congress believes that important officials cannot be trusted to exercise the powers which naturally and properly devolve upon them, efforts should be directed toward dislodging the official by open attack. Sniping at Government administrators, and undermining their influence by depriving them of power, is almost certain to impair their efficiency without assuring attainment of the end sought.

The Ides Of March

Batting for Harlan Miller yesterday, Senator Taft wondered whether "the doings in Washington have any active relation to the people of the United States."

It is easy to understand this uncertainty. All too often Washington assumes a sense of unreality, particularly apparent to newcomers.

However, the days before the Ides of March are decidedly not those in which unreality is the most outstanding characteristic of Washington. As Senator Taft drops the columnist's pen and reaches for his income tax blanks he will agree, with many of his fellow countrymen, that what occurs in Washington is not pure phantasy.

"An investigator is seeking the cause of a marked decline in the number of marriages." He might consider that it's becoming more difficult every day for a man to support a wife and a government.

"Civilization is under construction!" says a radio orator. Yes, and we're getting dinged tired of this rough detour we're bumping over.

A New Chapter

Views On The Anderson Episode

Question Of Psychology

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is an insult to the singer, as well as to those who admire and respect the great Marian Anderson, that she is not permitted to ennoble Constitution Hall or another large auditorium in the city with her splendid art.

I cannot understand the psychology of any group which preaches "Americanism" and denies by its actions the very truth in which it professes to believe. The Daughters of the American Revolution seem to be such a group. Marian Anderson, of course, is as much an American as any of us, but she differs from most of us in that she can, with her song, make life the glorious and noble experience that we little people, descendants of Revolutionary heroes notwithstanding, are often unable even to imagine

We are only preaching our own smallness in denying Miss Anderson the best that we have to offer.

JOHN ZEIGLER.
Washington, Feb 17.

Says No Code Violated

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the colored singer, Marian Anderson, has been quoted correctly by the Associated Press in this morning's Post, it is just as well that this controversy has been started, because it shows some of the work of agitators that is going on in little suspected places.

The singer is quoted as saying that she is "shocked beyonds words to be barred from the Capital of my country." This is absoutely untrue. She is not barred from the Capital. She can come here and sing all she wants to. There are plenty of places where she can sing. She can pitch a tent and sing. Maybe Mrs. Roosevelt will let her sing in the White House. There is no reason she cannot sing from the Capitol steps. But because she has been refused permission to sing in D. A. R. hall and Central High School the issue is now obscured by the claim that she is barred from the Capital. This issue is different from that of Jersey City. There the privilege of free speech was absolutely denied and Mayor Hague makes no bones about it. But that is not true here no matter what the agitators say about it.

If this singer is the great artist and cultured person all her admirers claim she is, one would think she would not insist on intruding in places where it is obvious she is not wanted. No code of any kind has been violated, when the owners of D. A. R. hall exercise their right of ownership in denying the use of their hall to those they do not want in it. The School Board is also within their rights for the same reason. Especially when other places are available. But that is not what the agitators want. They are always on the lookout to force an issue.

The racial question in the District of Columbia is rapidly being forced to a head and the colored people here are being exploited by the very ones who claim to be their friends.

The colored people of Washington need to have set before them some of the advantages they enjoy here. The press, especially, should set before them the necessity of making no move or doing anything that would slow up the good work that is being done for the colored race in Washington. These people who claim to be such lovers of the colored race are not their best friends. They are being deceived and misled by these self-appointed apostles. If the colored people themselves do not soon wake up they are going to find themselves the victims of a lot of selfish exploiters who do not have the real welfare of the colored race at heart.

This is the real motive back of the Marian Anderson agitation; back of the anti-lynching bill; back of the educational agitation and all the other efforts that are being made to bring about enmity and ill-will between the races.

PAUL MERTON.
Washington, Feb. 28.

What Berkeley Did

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Several summers ago while in Berkeley, Calif., a large tea was given in Berkeley's very beautiful International House. The guest artist was Spencer Kennedy, a Negro. His bass voice was superb and he was acclaimed by the numerous guests. Since then he has sung many times on the radio (where his color is not noticeable).

It hardly seems possible that the National Capital should be more provincial than a university in the West. One asks, is it the personality which counts more than the art of the musician? Marian Anderson has a rare voice and possesses artistic interpretation. It is for this reason that her art should be considered foremost.

ISABEL VICKERS.
Washington, Feb. 20.

Praises Mrs. Roosevelt

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In her reported resignation from the Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, because of their refusal to rent their auditorium for a concert by the artist Marian Anderson, Mrs. Roosevelt has once more lived up to her reputation as a great American liberal.

It seems that the sum of $1,750 for the concert by the artist is held to be excessive. This fee is far less than is charged by many American and European artists. There is an element of our population that seeks to keep the colored citizen in economic slavery by paying him as little as possible regardless of the value of his service, and also by charging him the most he can be forced to pay for everything he uses.

The passion displayed by those who would keep the Negro down only testifies to the inferiority complex from which they suffer.

HOWARD D. WOODSON.
Washington, March 1.

Sympathizes With D. A. R.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Some time ago I was in Richmond, Va., and, opening the daily paper, found an editorial urging the people to attend a concert by Marian Anderson. I understand that this singer has had large audiences and flattering treatment in other Southern cities.

Nevertheless, I am rather sympathetic with the attitude of the Daughters of the American Revolution and of the school board in refusing Constitution Hall and the auditorium of Central High School for Marian Anderson's appearance in Washington. The South has evolved a modus vivendi, worked out upon the principle of trial and error, which is resulting in increasingly cordial relations between the races and under which the colored people find not only opportunity for expanding culture within their own social circle, but the advantage of a sympathetic attitude upon the part of the majority race.

Here in Washington, organizations ostensibly concerned with the advancement of the colored race are challenging the principle of social separation, and the natural reaction is a defensive attitude, based upon no concessions.

Negroes of discriminating sense should demand that their so-called representatives cease trying to break into white schools and that they should rather lead their own people in a movement to check the vicious colored criminals who range the city, knocking down women, snatching pocketbooks and otherwise engaging in impudence and violence.

ANNIE BELLE MINGLEDORFF.
Washington, March 1.

Where Sentiments Lie

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Marian Anderson is an exponent of culture. And I refuse to believe that the action of the D. A. R. and the School Board in this celebrated case is a genuine reflection of the sentiments of the people of culture of Washington, as I was born and reared here. I refuse to believe that this action is representative of the sentiments of the Congress or of the President or of the majority of the people of Washington, all of whom the two boards are more or less responsible to.

RICHARD W. GANT.
Washington, Feb. 28.

Surprised By School Board

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The D. A. R. building is tax-exempt as are religious and educational institutions. This tax-exemption is granted on the assumption that such institutions are open to the public on equal terms, for all citizens are "equal under law," as the noble United States Supreme Court testifies on its face.

We citizens and taxpayers of the District of Columbia have to pay a higher tax because of all this untaxed "public" property. When, therefore, a singer like Marian Anderson, whom Toscanini says has a voice that is heard only once in a century, is barred, one wonders whether the Daughters of the American Revolution Hall ought not pay taxes because it is only partly public.

There is a case right now being instituted regarding the District of Columbia Bar Library in the courthouse to compel it to move out because it refuses colored lawyers the same right as white lawyers to use it. Taxpayers paid for this building, its heating, lighting and maintenance. Colored people have to pay equal taxes with white folk. They use the public libraries; why not the courthouse bar library? Colored people, human beings and also taxpayers are granted separate but equal schools and colleges, equal representation on the police and firemen's forces as well as clerical governmental positions in the District of Columbia. Why not?

I was not surprised at the D. A. R., which I have always maintained is a private group of elderly ladies who have no other claim to distinction than that they are descendents of some people who did real public service several generations ago. But when the Board of Education prohibited her from the use of a school auditorium, I was dumbfounded. Has our board also gone Nazi? Is it suffering a bad case of Dies-jitters? ARISTOTLE.
Washington, Feb. 19.

Anderson And Gigli

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The refusal of Constitution Hall and a high school auditorium to Marian Anderson is the more deplorable, as each foreign artist is given the possibility to appear there even if he behaves in the most scandalous manner, as has recently the Italian tenor Gigli. Mr. Gigli has been known as a hater of democracy for many years. Reports from Berlin showed that he used to enter the stage in Berlin with the Nazi salute "Heil Hitler." Having gone back to his native Italy with thousands and thousands of good American dollars, he besmears our country.

To him, as they have done and will do to Nazi artists, the D. A. R. willingly rent their hall, while to one of the greatest living artists, a native of this country, whom every American can be proud of, the hall is refused because her skin is dark. Miss Anderson is not responsible for her color. She has always behaved as a true American, increasing the glory of our country here and abroad. It seems to me tolerance is rapidly losing in our country, influenced by foreign propaganda.

D. L. MILLER.
Alexandria, Va., March 1.

The Post Impressionist

'Parfit, Gentle Knight'

ONE OF MY FIRST newspaper assignments in Washington was an interview with Ambassador Hirosi Saito at the Japanese Embassy. He was not at all difficult to see, and such courtesy as was given me in his house has not been exceeded elsewhere. No formality or swank, just a bright, smiling little man who was genuinely interested in his visitor, and who interviewed me much more than I interviewed him, and who when the interview was over knew all about me and was trying to suggest ways for me to get along in the big town to which I had come only a little while before.

And now I recall, I did not write an interview with Saito at all, but with Mrs. Saito. The story was printed in The Post. She showed me her lovely garden and told me that her favorite flowers were the American Beauty rose and the orchid and that American ice cream is the best in the world. Mrs. Saito rejoiced also that ice cream was so easy to get, "because drug stores are every place." She said that drug stores are not so numerous in Japan, and that the things they sell are mostly from America.

But it was this remark by Ambassador Saito that made the greatest impression on me that June afternoon at the Japanese Embassy:

"My country will never employ armed force against China."

His face glowed with deep emotion as he said the words. His belief amounted to faith. His vision of a peaceful Asia was clear and logical. He could see no reason for the Chinese and Japanese to kill each other.

Even then Saito seemed very frail, and he must have known what was the matter with him, that continued residence in a climate such as Washington's would endanger his life. Yet even after he had been relieved of his post as Ambassador, and could have returned to Japan as Minister of Foreign Affairs, he stayed on in Washington, perhaps hoping that through his friendships—and everyone knows how many they were—he could aid understanding between his country and the United States.

Think how deeply injured he must have been by the Panay incident, and by the train of tragic events that preceded and followed it in China. This gentle soul, himself of Samurai blood, disciple and exponent of the chivalry of bushido, was hurt beyond remedy by circumstances created by the acts of Japanese militarists.

Loving his own country with deep fervor, and giving America an affection such as many of her own sons could not even understand, he was torn as with steel claws by events in China that caused Japan to be disliked in America. He knew the other side of the Japanese picture, the gentler folk, both humble and of high degree, the dainty lady of the palace and the rough-handed peasant villager, who wrote hokku to a cherry blossom, to a birdling fallen from the nest, or the first streak of dawn, and who cherished the precept, "Even as you slay your foeman, forget not to love him."

To Saito, as he told me, there was so much to love and admire in both the Japanese and American peoples, it was a cruel pity even to think that they might ever be enemies. And the same with China, which he honored as the ancient mother of Japanese culture and as one of the great nations of all history.

But when the Panay was sunk, and there was nothing else to do, and nothing for him to say, he and Mrs. Saito canceled all social engagements, and he told the newspaper boys:

"I am in the doghouse now."

I wish he might have returned to Japan and worked among the great men of his nation for peace and amity in Asia and the world. But perhaps it was better that he did not, because power diplomacy was in the ascendant, and still is, both in Asia and Europe—and European dictators are reaching out for alliances with a strong-arm Japan.

Among my few cherished possessions is Hirosi Saito's book, "Japan's Policies and Purposes," which he gave me two years ago. I wish everyone could read Saito's final chapter, entitled, "The Cherry Blossoms," which he opens with an appreciation of the description of spring in the prologue to "The Canterbury Tales," and compares the Canterbury pilgrimage to the pilgrimage of tourists to Washington each spring to see the Japanese cherry trees in bloom around the Tidal Basin.

"There is in Japan a time-honored saying:

'As among flowers the cherry is queen,
So among men the Samurai is lord.'

"The spirit of the Samurai ennobles manhood, and the essence of that spirit is peculiarly and gracefully emulated by the cherry blossoms . . . One of the knightly virtues is honor . . . Our expression, 'to be ashamed before one's own mind,' or 'to keep the mind's mirror unclouded'—makes our conception of honor explicit. A perfect knight must ever keep account with himself. Once his sense of honor is violated or lost, then:

. . . 'Tis a relief to die;
Death's but a sure retreat from infamy."

Fair Enough

Night Club Idea

IF I WERE fixing to set a trap at the New York World's Fair I would call it Police Headquarters, stick a couple of those green lights out in front and try to get enjoined by the mayor or the police commissioner. Maybe they would seize me for impersonating a police station, and if so I would get some loud, cheap lawyer to habeas corpus the joint. The publicity would put me over for one season, which would be enough.

We would have no cuff in our plant. We would be strictly sleeveless, and all the debs, both male and female, the broken-down society tramps of both sexes, the tablecloth authors and playwrights, the men-about-town and the whole class of moochers of the night side of New York would be barred.

We would announce that all customers would have to lift their eight, and that would scare them off, but just for a gag we would get up circulars of all the celebrities who are commonly mentioned in the columns dealing with saloon society, using their pictures wherever possible, and hang them on the walls of headquarters, offering a reward of $50 for proof that any one of them ever bought a drink. That would be a safe offer.

The Mooching Is Just Terrible

THEIR KIND of trade brings publicity, to be sure, but what good is publicity if the free-loaders shove the cash customers off into the alcoves or crowd them out entirely? I just don't see how some of our night-side operators get by with the mooching that goes on today. The scion trade, the bum society trade and the celebrity trade all create a large bundle of clippings in the course of a year, but I am not Mr. Zero and you can have that business. I will take the tourist and the honest local yokel out for 10 bucks worth of Saturday night.

I would treat them all right, too. I wouldn't kid anybody. I would announce that our regular $1.50 dinner could probably be duplicated for from 35 to 50 cents in any one of a thousand beaneries around town and admit that the margin was the jailer's graft or lug—a familiar practice in most American institutions of this kind. Food is really a nuisance in saloon-type restaurants, and maybe after a while we would get down to the point of leaving a papier-mache sandwich at each plate or just painting a portrait of a slice of ham on each plate.

Scrambled Eggs At 1 In Morning!

WHEN PEOPLE go out rejoicing, they want gin, rum rye, Scotch and maybe a few layers of brandy for the small hours. We would keep some cheap champagne on hand, too, in case of couples out celebrating their fifteenth or twentieth wedding anniversaries with the in-laws and business customers.

I took a friend into Jack White's one night, and when this friend ordered scrambled eggs about 1 in the morning there was the damnedest row in the kitchen that you ever did hear. The cook and the dishwasher poked their heads in to see what the guy looked like who was ordering food, and when the eggs finally came the busboy was two jumps ahead of the waiter with a whole tray of bicarb, bromo, bismuth and chewing gum.

I hear we have a place in town called the Fire House, but the Police Station would top that. For my part I have always wanted one of those comfortable police sergeant's chairs, canted somewhat back, with big side arms. We would have that kind of chair all around.

Uniformed Sergeant To Book Customers

WE WOULD have a desk inside the entrance, with a sergeant on duty in uniform to formally book the customers before turning them over to the turnkeys to be ushered to their cells. Naturally, they wouldn't have to give their square names, and, of course, we wouldn't search them unless that became necessary along toward closing time. I don't think it would be a wise idea to have bunks in the cells. But we would hire famous retired cops—like, say, Dick Enright or Ed Mulrooney if they could be had—to be around in their old uniforms, and maybe some old Cannons or Petermen to wait on table. Paroled guys would have to be out, because they can get picked up for working where liquor is served.

I don't see why we couldn't call our joint Police Headquarters. After all, how many Lido Goldfarbs have there been in this country and Rivieras and Versailleses and Villa Venices and White Houses and Palaces? What about the Macfadden-Deauville and the Dempsey-Vanderbilt?

What is so sacred about the name of Police Headquarters?

A Word-Picture Of The New Pope

Georgetown University Vice President, Regent of the School of Foreign Service.

THE UNUSUAL SPEED with which the conclave elected a new Pope bears a deep and possibly an historic significance. The election of Cardinal Eugenio Pacelli to the Supreme Pontificate and his choice of the name of Pius XII can not fail to convey certain important connotations to an expectant world. That the conclave lasted but one day is in itself a striking contrast to certain previous experiences, notably that of the year 1271, at Viterbo, which lasted over two years and nine months and gave rise to the new legislation which expedited all Papal elections for the future and became law at the second council of Lyons in 1274. The unprecedented speed with which the conclave registered its choice before God and man proclaims to the world that Eugenio Pacelli, in their opinion, is the man sent by God to rule the Church and to lend succor, grace and understanding to secular powers in the uncertain future that lies ahead.

It has sometimes been popular to speak of a "political" Pope and a "spiritual" Pope. Writers have sought to indicate the outstanding characteristic of a Sovereign Pontiff by the broad distinction implied in those two words. Without suggesting that the word "political" meant a politician in the chair of St. Peter, the term has been used to describe Pontiffs who dealt very directly and often with fundamental issues in the realm of the foreign relations of the Papacy. The designation "spiritual," on the other hand, rather identified Pontiffs whose disposition and activities leaned more toward internal discipline of the Church, the strengthening of its religious life and dogma and the increase of devotion and asceticism.

THOUGH THESE two functions and duties are inseparable from the universal charge imposed on every father of Christiandom, and have been exercised by all pontiffs, the distinction has its value in recording the different phases of papal activity throughout the centuries.

It would appear that the special needs of the times resulted yesterday in the election of a Pope who combines within his own person the two important qualities of statesmanship and deep concern for the spiritual life of the Church. Even during the arduous labors demanded of a Papal secretary of state, Cardinal Pacelli had found time for a series of deeply spiritual pronouncements, addresses and publications which testify to his inherent spiritual sensibility and clearness of vision with respect to things of the soul.

His address at the Eucharistic Congress at Buenos Aires a few years ago is an outstanding example of moral grandeur. His many priestly activities in Rome bear witness to a strength of character which did not permit the heavy preoccupations of a diplomat's life to minimize his essential vocation as a spiritual leader. Hence, if his past life be fair indication of his future activities, the internal life of the Catholic Church will receive still further stimulus and impetus under his guidance.

Veteran in Problems Of International Import

THAT THE SECOND characteristic of statesmanship is present in the new Pontiff no one will deny. For a quarter of a century Eugenio Pacelli has been entrusted by the Holy See with duties of the highest importance in the field of international relations. As assistant secretary of state in the Pontificate of Benedict XV he was early initiated into the actual problems and working of Papal diplomacy. Then, as first nuncio to Germany, in the post-war period, he occupied one of the most delicate positions in Europe and was instrumental in concluding the concordat with a new Germany. It was during this period that I made my first acquaintance with the present Pius XII, while he was still nuncio in Munich, in the winter of 1924. Arriving in Germany directly from Soviet Russia on business connected with urgent questions of relief affecting both Russia and Germany, I was ushered, one bitter cold night, into the drawing room of the Papal nunciature.

As I remember the occasion, there was no fire because of the almost universal lack of fuel. But the room was warmed by the very definite friendliness and personality of the occupant. This courteous and considerate treatment of each new visitor is one of the salient human qualities of the new Pontiff. There is always a courteous smile and an unostentatious but impressive dignity in the carriage of the tall and slim figure. The face is one at which men would turn to gaze, even in the public streets.

The eyes have the look of one whose gaze is fixed on more substantial realities than those appearing on the surface of things. Those who had the privilege of hearing Cardinal Pacelli speak here in Washington in 1936, all commented on this aspect of his looks and agreed that his ascetic countenance and the long crimson robe symbolized the age-long tradition and function of the oldest spiritual power in the world.

Rock of Stability In Disturbed World

IF ONE ADDS to these gifts of nature and of grace the further accomplishments achieved by hard labor, there results a pontiff in whom the world may well expect a rock of stability and an anchor of hope. No ruler of any modern state will have had a more providential preparation to grapple with the elements that make for confusion in Europe and throughout the world. The present Pope, in addition, is an accomplished linguist. Without so much as a note before him, he addressed a crowded meeting of newspaper correspondents here in Washington at the National Press Club with a clearness and accuracy that left a lasting impression. At considerable personal fatigue—and with the danger always present in travel by air—Cardinal Pacelli flew from New York to the furthermost bounds of the American continent and returned by air in order to have ocular evidence of the vast reaches of the United States and to know something of the geographical extent of this continent. His conference at that time with President Roosevelt brought face to face two men in whose hands now reposes much of the future destiny of world peace. The Cardinal's trips to other parts of the world—to South America, to Central Europe and other important areas—furnished him that knowledge and that personal understanding which will give to his judgment the seal and weight of mature experience.

One of Most Acute Dangers Removed

THE END of the ghastly civil war in Spain opens up new possibilities for peace in Europe by removing one of the most acute dangers. So, the election of yesterday may well open up new and hopeful vistas for the exercise of that restraining influence and broad sympathy which the Vatican may soon be called upon to wield in the council of rulers. In their desperate attempt to recapture order and insure international peace, the governments of the world will find not only a competent and experienced diplomat on the Papal throne, but an exceptional personality endowed by nature and by grace with spiritual perception, broad understanding and a human sympathy that extends to all classes—because, based on the unchanging principles of the Sermon on the Mount, Pius XII will undoubtedly and with impartial justice accord to Caesar the things that are Caesar's but not the things that are God's.

Fortune Survey

By Ernest K. Lindley

New Deal Approved

IF YOU BELIEVE what you hear around Washington, President Roosevelt and his policies have lost the confidence of the country and the New Deal is all "washed up." The Republicans and conservative Democrats have built up such a bear market on Roosevelt that even some of the New Dealers are selling him short.

Now, however, Fortune magazine appears with a survey showing that the President and his policies are approved by 63.5 per cent of the voters who have an opinion on the subject. As less than 6 per cent of all those polled lacked a definite opinion one way or the other, this is an impressive verdict for Mr. Roosevelt. The answer shows also that during the last two months the popularity of Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal has increased.

Obviously, somebody is out of touch with the real sentiments of the American people. This column offers no opinion as to the accuracy of the Fortune survey, except to recall that in 1936 it forecast Mr. Roosevelt's majority within 1 per cent. If the Fortune survey is right, the anti-New Deal Democrats from right-wingers such as Senator Byrd down through such "moderates" as John N. Garner either don't know what a majority of the voters really think or are ignoring it. As Mr. Garner, so far as I know, has never pretended to be more than a good practical politician, I assume that he would not knowingly defy the settled opinions of the electorate.

Incorrect Readings Of Public Mind

IF THE FORTUNE survey is even approximately correct, a great many Democrats in Congress have let themselves be stampeded into the anti-Roosevelt camp by trepidations based on incorrect readings of the public mind. The questions asked in this survey were general in character, of course. Most people who approve on the whole of Mr. Roosevelt and his policies disagree with him in various particulars. An overwhelming vote for him is not a demand that Congress act as his "rubber stamp." Neither is it a demand that Congress lend itself to the uses of a "rubber stamp" opposition. It is a warning to the members of Congress, and especially to the Democrats, that they should think twice—or three or four times—before they flout him.

The Fortune survey also shows that, among the voters who now approve of Roosevelt, approximately 58 per cent would vote for him again in 1940, while about 21 per cent say they would not and about 21 per cent are doubtful.

The first figure is roughly 37 per cent of the whole electorate and the others are about 13 per cent each. These returns can be used to show, negatively, that Franklin D. Roosevelt could not win as a third-term candidate unless he received the votes of all those who say now that they do not know whether or not they would vote for him in 1940. But the returns indicate, also, that the "no third term" tradition represents no deep conviction on the part of a great majority of the American people.

Only 13% Disfavor The Third Term

THERE IS NO WAY of knowing, from this survey, how the people who are already against Roosevelt feel about the third-term tradition in the abstract. What it has shown is that only 13 per cent of the voters feel strongly enough about the tradition to indicate that they would vote against Mr. Roosevelt because of it in 1940, and only 13 per cent—for various reasons—are doubtful.

Many hearty Roosevelt supporters of my acquaintance are strongly against a third term—some of them on general principles, some because they want to take the progressive-Democratic movement out from under the shadow of a single personality, some because they believe that a leader of different talents and personality would be better fitted for the task of carrying forward the work Mr. Roosevelt has begun.

Retains Confidence Of Great Majority

YET I HAVE heard many of those same individuals say, when pinned down, that if they had to choose between a third term and the election of a conservative Democrat or the loss of the election to a conservative Republican, they would vote for Mr. Roosevelt again. Probably many of the Roosevelt supporters who say now that they would not vote for him in 1940 would change their minds if the alternatives were less acceptable than those they supposed when they gave their answers to Fortune.

Mr. Roosevelt does not want a third term: of that all of his close associates whom I know are convinced. But he retains the confidence of a great majority of the electorate. Even with the handicap of the third-term tradition he remains the strongest candidate now in sight on the Democratic side. By the spring of 1940 the movement to draft him may be too powerful to be resisted.

To Discuss Music

"Modern Swing Music" will be the topic of an address by Carroll R. Dougherty, economic adviser to the wages and hours administrator, at the Washington Book Shop, 916 Seventeenth street northwest, at 8:30 o'clock tonight.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

Although With Averted Eyes

SIX YEARS AGO a book appeared depicting life in China. Its title was "The House of Exile" and it achieved the honor of becoming a best-seller on the non-fiction lists. Among the chorus of praising critics there was one disgruntled voice who protested that no picture of China could be true which omitted the dirt, smell, neglect and dissolution of that great country.

The critic was Alexander Woollcott and the author of the book was Nora Waln.

Mr. Woollcott was promptly taken to task by a little girl who, from school in Switzerland, set out to put Mr. Woollcott right about the author. The letter she wrote so enchanted Mr. Woollcott that he published it in "While Rome Burns." The readers of that book will, no doubt, remember it:

A Little Girl Defends Homeland

"DEAR MR. WOOLLCOTT:

"I am Nora Waln's daughter. Mummy is not just a pacifist by inheritance. She is one by conviction also. No matter what one does to her, she will not take any action. I am not a birthright Quaker. Both parents have to be one or the child is not. My father is a member of the Church of England but does not go to church. I will probably not be a pacifist. Anyhow I am not one yet. I think you ought to be written to and I am doing it.

"I have read your article. I was born in China and lived nearly all my life there. I have read mummy's book carefully and I do not find any untruth in it. Certainly she does not put everything down. Mummy never mentions nasty things in her conversation. I do not think she concentrates on them in her mind. She may see them but I do not think she could write them. Filth makes her vomit. When she has to pass anything horrid she goes quickly and does not look. If anyone mentions anything not nice, such as blood on the meat platter as my Cousin Brenda did at lunch, mummy is sick right then. Uncle Jim says she has always been like that. I feel that it is naughty of you to write that she shouldn't notice only beauty. Why shouldn't she? If you want something else written then can't you write it yourself?

"But if you write anything bad about China I shall not like it. China is the best country in the world. I have not seen any other place to compare with my birthland. Mai-da's life is told correctly.

"Besides having read your article about mummy, I have read your article about taking a little girl to the theater in February, and I have seen your picture in the Cosmopolitan.

"My conclusion is that you are not a bad man but a too hasty one.

"Yours sincerely,
"MARIE OSLAND-HILL."

New Book Tells About Germany

I REPUBLISH this letter at this time because Nora Waln has written another book, called "Reaching for the Stars." It is a book about present-day Germany. Mrs. Waln went there in June, 1934, with her husband, who had retired from the British civil service in the Far East and wished to study music in music's home. Mrs. Waln lived among Germans, the life of Germans, during the greater part of the Hitler regime to date.

She was not in Germany as a reporter. She did not go out of her way to find out anything. And on the testimony of her little daughter Mrs. Waln is a lady who "when she has to pass anything horrid goes quickly and does not look."

Mrs. Waln is a Quaker, bred in Pennsylvania, one of those gentle people dedicated to the Kingdom of God in this world whose strength of spirit has won them the respect of all mankind.

Mrs. Waln does not believe in violence at all, not even the violence of the word. She loved Germany from the memory of the Germans among whom she lived as a child in Pennsylvania. Her nature and her religion compel her to give offense to no man. She greeted Germans with the Hitler salute because it was the custom of the country where she was a guest. She strove to see only the best. That which was not good and worthy to be praised is recorded in this book only because it intruded itself into her life and hence into a picture luminous with truth.

Damning Document On Hitlerism

ON THE TITLE page of her book she states her standpoint. The words are Goethe's: "Fashions of this world are in continuous change and I would concern myself with things that are abiding."

And therefore, and because of all these things, she has written one of the most beautiful tributes to Germany and one of the most damning documents on Hitlerism that has come from any pen.

She writes almost as a diarist. "Reaching For the Stars" is a picture of domestic life among people whose domestic life in all its forms—in its cleanliness, its family loyalties, its orderliness, its natural discipline and its culture—is admirable.

She is a German scholar familiar with the history, literature and folklore of the country where she is a guest, and in her search to understand the present she constantly reaches into the past.

She has an enormous, imaginative sympathy for people and a tolerance as wide as the world.

The True Germany Causes Nostalgia

NO ONE CAN READ this book without loving Germany better. No one who reads this book can believe, having read it, that Naziism is the final face of Germany. Reading it awakened in me such a nostalgia for the country where I also lived so long and where I have found a few of my best and truest friends that it was almost unbearable. I gave it to a German Jewish emigre, who laid it down, saying: "Yes, that is Germany"—turned away to hide his tears.

Here is a book that contains Hitler youths who are adorable boys; Storm Troopers devoted to a cause and permeated with idealism; officials who are courteous; a picture of the Fuehrer in a moving relationship to simple people.

And here is a book that describes, always in understatement, an appalling terror. The terror is everywhere. The old scholar whom she visits in his little woodland house to discuss with him the builder of the great wall of China had two sons—one fell in the war, the other is in a concentration camp. His father is glad and proud. He thinks that is where his son should be—where all honorable and truth-loving young men of courage must be.

People disappear from the midst of civilized, affectionate little groups and no one hears of them again.

One speaks with one's neighbors "through the flowers"—muffling one's words with the table decorations.

One encounters little open opposition to the regime but an enormous quiet sabotage of it. One sees people being decent in a bootlegged fashion, helping Jews under a regime which makes the Golden Rule a crime except inside the tribe.

Naziism's Duration Seen Overestimated

AND IN THE END one hears a great expression of faith in the German people and in the great role that Germany will yet play in Western civilization.

"Often I have heard it said that Naziism will last 1,000 years. I think that those who speak for it overestimate its duration. The good in this movement will endure. All other elements the German people will discard. They are an educated populace. Their future history will be different from that of the less cultured people on whom barbaric emotionalism is used."

One last thing about this book: Mrs. Waln wrote it in Germany, whose Fuehrer so admired "The House of Exile" that he bought many copies for distribution to his friends. She had no anxiety about her manuscript. She had only three copies, and she posted them separately and, as it happened, from separate places to her various publishers. Not one of the copies ever arrived.

So this book suffered the fate of Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution" and Edna Millay's "Conversation at Midnight." It was destroyed. Every word of it had to be rewritten in England from the notes she had taken.

This was the answer of the German government to one who tried to see the truth, nothing but the truth, with loving eyes.

"Reaching for the Stars," by Nora Waln, is published by Little, Brown & Co.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Cocktail Hour

BETWEEN the dark and the daylight,
When the day has begun to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the cocktail hour.

I HEAR in the lounge and the barroom
The patter of many feet,
And the orders for strange concoctions
With instructions "And not too sweet!"

FROM MY chair I see in the doorway
The shoppers at close of day,
Who must have a little "pick-up"—
And have it without delay.

GRAVE ALICE and laughing Allegra,
And Edith (with tilted hat),
Who say, "Shake another, Emil—
There wasn't a kick in that!"

THEY CHATTER as gay as magpies—
A man hasn't half a show
To get in a comment edgeways
When the girls have had three or so.

THE HORS D'OEUVRES are passed and sampled
At table and bench and bar
By people who eat, but never
Quite know what the darned things are.

A SUDDEN rush for a table—
A fight for a chosen chair—
The rattle of ice in shakers—
The laughter of women fair.

THE GIRLS who drop in from business
As nonchalant as can be,
And put down a drink their fathers
Would choke on in misery.

THE WOMAN with many bundles,
Who unloads 'em with a sigh—
And orders a double brandy—
(Or maybe a triple rye).

THE HURRIED and pale commuters
Outbound for the 5:02 train,
Who drink with amazing swiftness
And order "the same again!"

THE TALK that becomes chaotic,
The debby who says "Just one,"
But gets to her sixth or seventh,
Exclaiming, "'Oh, this is fun!"

BY 7, or maybe later,
"Say, where are the phone booths here?"
And then, "I'll be late for dinner—
Got tied up in traffic, dear."

"GOT CAUGHT in the subway, honest" . . .
"They couldn't get any power" . . .
"Detained at the office, honey" . . .

At 73 Samuel Ozment Still Makes Fiddles (Not Violins)

SAMUEL L. OZMENT

Retired White House Gardener Made His First Instrument From a Cigar Box—and It Played

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding that so-called "old age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

Once upon a time there was a blacksmith in western Tennessee who loved to play the fiddle. At the drop of an anvil he would put that pet of his to his chin and tear off "The Eighth of January" with such spirit and feeling as would have warmed the heart cockles of "Old Hickory" himself.

Now this country fiddler had a son and the son admired his daddy's playing very much, indeed. His palms itched to try his hand at swinging a bow, but his stern parent always had the same answer to Sam's request for an audition: "No!" It seems the elder Ozment was especially proud of his fiddle because he had won it in an election bet in 1853 and he was reluctant to trust the prized possession in the hands of a rank youngster.

"But that didn't stop me," says Samuel L. Ozment, of 1361 Perry place northwest. "I made my own fiddle out of a cigar box. That was when I was about 13. Then one day, when the chance presented itself, I spirited away father's fiddle, took it to the woodshed and traced the shape of it on paper. From this pattern I made forms, then fashioned a fiddle for myself."

Mr. Ozment, now 73 years old, has been making and playing fiddles practically continuously ever since. Use of the word violin is avoided here intentionally because, like his father, Mr. Ozment is and has been an old-time country fiddler, not a violinist. Again like his father, he is a blacksmith by trade, though during the last 15 years of his wage-earning career he was a White House gardener. He was retired a couple of years ago.

Automobiles drove him out of his Tennessee smithy. This modern age also is responsible for the relegation of country fiddlin' to limbo, except in isolated regions of the country, but Mr. Ozment's interest in this specialized form of music has never waned. He reckons he has made dozens of fiddles, absolutely guaranteed to give off "Corduroy Bridge" and "Roll on Bales of Cotton" as they were never given off before. And he has every intention of making many more.

He never had a lesson in vio—oops!—fiddle construction or playing in his life. Yet he doesn't recall a single dissatisfied customer. Not long ago he built an instrument for his little grandson. While he was still on the President's gardening force he made one for a White House policeman friend. His hobby, while not a fortune-maker, could hardly be called unprofitable.

And what might his favorite music be?

"In the first place," he replied, "I don't like jazz."

Mrs. Ozment interrupted to explain he meant "swing."

"Swing or jazz," her husband continued, "give me the waltz, the polka or the schottische."

He painfully admits that the latter two, at least, are pretty scarce nowadays.

Taft Voices Anti-Lynch Bill Plea

Senator, at Howard Charter Day Dinner, Doubts WPA Benefits Will Be Lasting

Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), of Ohio, speaking last night at the fifteenth annual charter day dinner, at Howard University, on a national radio hookup to alumni everywhere, expressed himself as in favor of an anti-lynching bill, opposed to exclusion of Marian Anderson from appearance in concert here because of her race, and doubtful of lasting beneficial effects of the Works Progress Administration, especially as far as colored citizens are concerned.

"Progress of the colored race in America," he said, "has been due to the inherent qualities which this race possesses. The foundation of that progress is found in the Constitution of the United States. It is my belief that we need, at this time, a Federal anti-lynching bill, to protect those Federal constitutional rights which colored citizens have in theory but, in some places, not in fact."

Opposes Anderson Ban

Reference to the Marian Anderson matter was brief, and pointed. "Colored citizens," the Senator said, "will always have to fight against certain narrow prejudices such as those which have excluded Marian Anderson from appearance in the Nation's Capital."

The speaker, however, after tracing the progress of the colored race in America since the Civil War, paying tribute to Gen. O. O. Howard, founder of the university which bears his name, and the contributions of graduates of the university to the arts and sciences and in the professional field, spoke more at length on the problem of unemployment by which, he said, these graduates now are peculiarly affected.

"Of the millions of unemployed," he said, "there is an undue proportion of colored people everywhere. The WPA is not a substitute for real jobs and does not provide an economic program for the future. It is leading colored people into economic serfdom. The whole movement of regimentation is a threat, more against the colored race than against any other segment of the population, for the colored men will be regimented as a minority by an unfavorable majority.

"The Government is a negative and defensive thing. Colored people must look to their own efforts, assisted, not controlled, by the Government. There exists for them an economic discrimination which we must do our utmost to reduce. Only by your own efforts in the economic field can you build economic security for the future, and continue to make progress as you have in the past."

Tribute Paid Founders

Tribute was paid by Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, university president, to the 17 founders of the institution, who built an institution "to admit emancipated slaves and their children, along with their own children, to the highest possible training that might be afforded.

The dinner, under auspices of the classes of 1889, 1899, 1909, 1919, 1929 and 1939, represented on the program by Nelson E. Weatherless, John C. Payne, Mrs. Jimmie B. Middleton, Emory B. Smith, Miss Effie Simmons and Mrs. Mary R. Parker, was in charge of a committee headed by Mrs. Jennie Mustapha Tate, of the class of 1919. A plan of alumni contribution was presented by Dr. William M. Cobb. Musical numbers were furnished by the men's glee club, under direction of Roy W. Tibbs.

House Group Meets Today On Gallinger

University Heads To List Complaints Against Hospital Regime

A sub-committee of the House District Committee today will hear the Very Rev. Arthur A. Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown University, and Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington University, explain their complaints against the administration of Gallinger Hospital by five resident physicians.

Chairman Bates (Democrat), of Kentucky, said the hearings will continue all day until representatives of the employes and social welfare groups are heard. He hopes to have a report ready for submission to the District Committee Monday.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland yesterday defended the conduct of the residential physicians, whose positions were created only last year, and laid the blame for friction on the younger visiting doctors.

Physicians Irked

The young physicians, he said, were irked because they have not been allowed a free hand in surgical cases at the hospital. He denied, however, that any patients were being used as guinea pigs by curious young surgeons.

The morality rate has dropped, Dr. Ruhland said, and patients are receiving more prompt attention since the installation of the resident physicians.

A new examination of Gallinger was disclosed at the hearing when Dr. A. T. McCormick, head of the Kentucky State health department, participated in the inquiry. He had been asked to make an inspection of the local hospital, it was learned, by Chairman Bates, of the sub-committee, who is an intimate friend of Dr. McCormick.

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, served warning on Dr. Ruhland during the hearing that he would not protect any "shyster doctors" in connection with the Gallinger inquiry. Dr. Ruhland replied that he would not condone the employment of "shysters" at the hospital. Schulte did not explain whom he had in mind.

Hospital "Handicapped"

Dr. Ruhland, after admitting the inadequacies of staff and equipment at the hospital, stated that the "good services" of the volunteer physicians is appreciated.

"But the hospital is handicapped at times," he added, "because the good men are not available when needed."

Following the health officer's testimony, Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of the hospital, said that both the public and the appropriating bodies have been slow to realize how rapidly Gallinger has developed in recent years.

The present staff, he said, is "extremely inadequate."

Schulte said that he would do what he could to get more appropriations for the hospital, but he added that "we are going to take a lot of whippings from the so-called taxpayers."

Citizens Urge Retention of School Board

The Washingtonians Oppose Feature of Griffenhagen Plan

Retention of the Board of Education as an independent organization was asked last night by The Washingtonians.

The group went on record in opposition to the Griffenhagen report proposal to remove administrative powers from the board and leave it only advisory functions.

Abolition of right and left turns by autoists "at busy intersections in the city" and enactment of a bill to permit District citizens to elect representatives to national political conventions also won approval.

A resolution opposing the establishment of Government liquor dispensaries here also was adopted with the explanation that the change in the method of liquor selling "would just result in another opportunity to appoint outsiders to positions . . ."

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, was commended for his efforts to secure a larger Federal contribution to the expenses of the District and the Boys Club activity of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, won the hearty support of the group.

Among the guests at the meeting were L. A. Carruthers, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Sefton Darr, president of the District Bar Association, and Malcolm McConihe, Democratic national committeeman for the District.

Many Foreign Policies Urged At Legislative Bureau Dinner

Ideas Range From Power Politics To Complete Disarmament; Nover Says U. S. Has 'Period of Grace'

Every type of foreign policy from "hard-boiled and unrelenting" pressure on undemocratic nations to an emotional revulsion from the materialism and militarism of Europe was urged last night by members and guests of the Independent Legislative Bureau at a dinner at the Cosmos Club.

Nearly 150 members of Government departments and agencies, university professors and Congressmen gathered to hear and take part in the discussion. The principal speakers were Irving Brant, author of "Storm Over the Constitution;" Barnet Nover, Washington Post writer on foreign affairs; Miss Frida Utley, formerly correspondent in China for the Manchester Guardian; Miss Constance Kyle, social worker recently returned from Spain, and William T. Stone, acting president of the National Foreign Policy Association.

The speakers were introduced by Richard W. Hogue, director of the bureau, who presided.

Far East Policy Assailed

All speakers agreed that America's foreign policy has in the past been a tale of lost opportunities. Miss Utley criticized the policy of "apparent indifference to what goes on in China," where "Japanese aggression, directly connected with totalitarian aggression in Europe, had been made possible only through America's willingness to supply Japan with the implements of war."

The world's sufferings today are due to the failure to appreciate the personal strength of Hitler and the influence of Machiavelli in Fascist politics, Brant suggested. By judging Hitler and Mussolini "according to the principles of vitrue and honor," instead of recognizing that they could be moved only by fear, we had allowed them to grow too strong to be checked, he said.

We still have a "period of grace," according to Nover, but it is "subject to powers determined to cut it as short as possible." Munich was not the end of the totalitarian advance, he said, for it is the nature of the system to move on, but our temporary security gives us time to succeed where Britain and France have failed. He urged America to abandon "empty slogans" like "isolationism" and "collective security," and recognize that there is no other democracy in the world today, since Chamberlain and Daladier are now forced to treat Parliament and the Chamber of Deputies as Hitler treats his "puppet Reichstag."

America a Factor

Pointing out that our foreign policy was handicapped by the double control of Congress and the State Department, Stone emphasized that "whether we like it or not, America is a factor in the world balance of power." That fact should be the basis of our policy, he asserted, and suggested a study of possible revision of the neutrality act to permit active participation in European affairs, even if only by "measures short of war."

Dr. Frederick C. Howe, former Commissioner of Immigration at New York, proposed that America disarm completely and "stand naked before the world to teach the people that one nation believes in the principles of Christianity and the principles of peace."

The economic aspects of the problem were discussed by Representative Compton I. White (Democrat), of Idaho, who proposed regulation of international exchange to permit a peace based on free economic intercourse. The same thought was expanded by Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser of the Department of Agriculture, who declared the only hope for the world was to correct the economic injustice of the Versailles Treaty. Z. Lewis Lalby, general counsel of the United States Employment Compensation Commisison, suggested that an embargo on war materials be placed on all nations violating the Kellog-Briand Pact.

School Politics Deplored by Educators

Resolution, With D. C. Backing, Voted At Cleveland

The American Association of School Administrators, in convention at Cleveland, Ohio, yesterday adopted a resolution backed by the Education Association of the District of Columbia condemning politics in school control. The resolution was believed aimed at education provisions in the recent Griffenhagen report.

It recognized "with pride that the American system of electing boards directly by the people to control public education without interference from city councils and commissions has been responsible for a large share of the independence of schools and the educational achievements of the country."

It condemned "recent attempts to break down this system by subordinating the control and support of education to boards charged with many other responsibilities in government."

In Washington, meanwhile, Wilbur S. Finch, president of the District of Columbia Suffrage Association, took exception to a statement of the superintendent of schools, Dr. William Ballou, that the local Board of Education "preserves the right of local self-government." Finch said the board consists of Federal appointees, unlike those of the States.

Judge Raedy Named to Teach At National U.

Judge Ellen K. Raedy, second woman judge in District history, has been named first woman faculty member of the National University School of Law, The Post learned yesterday. She will be professor of legal ethics.

Her appointment came while the Cy Pres Club, composed of alumnae and women students of the school, was pressing for a dean of women and a woman faculty member. The club said last night it would continue to urge appointment of a woman dean.

Judge Raedy, daughter of former Police Captain Michael Raedy, was appointed July 9, 1935, to succeed Municipal Court Judge Mary O'Toole. She is an alumna of National University Law School and a member of Omicron Chapter of Kappa Beta Pi, national women's legal sorority.

2 Liquor Stores Robbed of $150 By Bandit Pair

Two liquor store operators last night were robbed of approximately $150.

Benjamin Kemenitchny, 79, and Jack Goldberg, 26, a clerk, were robbed of $125 in a store in the 1300 block of Seventh street northwest, by two colored men.

Later, Sam Marmelstein, 45, of the 500 block of Roxbury drive northwest, was held up and robbed of $24 in his establishment in the 400 block of Eleventh street northwest.

His two assailants forced William Gallagher, who entered the store as they were leaving, into a back room.

Bullets, Bricks Crash Windows Of 2 High Stores

Managers of two High's Ice Cream Stores narrowly escaped with their lives last night when shots were fired into their establishments and a third also escaped injury when bricks were thrown through the window of her store.

Bullets were fired into stores in the 3100 block of Mount Pleasant street northwest and in the 1900 block of Pennsylvania avenue northwest. Windows in the store in the 700 block of Eighth street southeast were smashed by the bricks, polics said.

Drivers of the Highland Farms Dairy, owner of the ice cream stores, have been on strike for some time.

Capital Woman Helps Vocational Conference

Miss Maxine Gordon, 1139 Abbey place northeast, is one of a committee arranging a three-day vocational conference at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., the university announced yesterday. The conference will begin Tuesday.

Arranged by the Women's Self-Government Association, the conference will include opportunities for students to discuss their choice of career with leading business and professional women.

Capital News In Brief

All Quiet on Riot Front

A police squad car screamed up to the Roger Smith Powhatan Hotel last night, siren blowing, its two officers expecting plenty of trouble. A police call had just been flashed that a fight was in progress between striking picketers and a group of men armed with clubs.

All was quiet when they arrived, followed shortly by reporters and photographers, but one of the strikers remembered talking to some small boys who had been guests at a banquet at a nearby restaurant, and were given toy souvenir baseball bats.

Man Found Afire

A 60-year-old unidentified man, believed to be an inmate of Soldiers' Home, is in Casualty Hospital suffering with severe burns on his legs.

He was found in a brush fire in Fort Totten Park, just off Bates road northeast, by Charles M. Updike, special policeman at Catholic University.

Social, Economic Standards of South Must Be Improved, Educator Warns

New Texas U. Head Cites Way to Better Living Conditions

Standards of living in the South may be raised only by the development of a collective social, economic and political intelligence, Dr. Homer P. Rainey, president-designate of the University of Texas, declared last night.

"The South is potentially one of the wealthiest regions in the world," he said at a banquet of the former students of the University of Texas.

"It has an abundance of raw materials," he continued, "and it also is the chief source of labor in the country.

"Today, however, both of these sources of wealth are being exploited to the economic improvishment of the South. Somehow we must teach our people to think together for the improvement of their well-being . . . Our actions too long have been dominated by our emotions. We have tended to wrap ourselves in garments of self-pity, and have not been facing our social and economic problems realistically."

Dr. Rainey told the 325 persons gathered at the Press Club and a radio audience that "a university of the first class is the best instrument that a democracy ever has devised for the improvement of the well-being of its people."

Emphasizing that the University of Texas has facilities giving its faculty "the maximum opportunity to work creatively with . . . students," he asked provision of salaries large enough to attract great teachers to the school.

Dr. Rainey drew attention to the fine research activities of the university and said it "must discover knowledge on the one hand, but it must also impart the accumulated knowledge of the past and present to the oncoming youth of the State."

Sherwood Hit to Halt Run to Make Picture

Massey Will Star in "Abe Lincoln" Film; John Boles Is Returning to Town; Pertinent Paragraphs on the Theater

ROBERT E. SHERWOOD'S monumental play of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," one of the most successful and perhaps the most widely praised drama in the recent history of the American theater, will end its New York engagement in the late spring in order to permit Raymond Massey, its star, to make the film version of the play that has so much to say and says it so impressively in behalf of our democracy and the towering figure that stands in history as its supreme protagonist.

BELL

"Abe Lincoln in Illinois" has played to capacity business on Broadway since its opening there last October, following the Washington premiere. It seems certain that it will continue to play to standing-room audiences up to the time of its arbitrary closing, which will be approximately the first of June.

The play will be produced as a motion picture under the joint auspices of Max Gordon, noted Broadway producer, and RKO-Radio Pictures. The film production will be made at the RKO studios in Hollywood under the supervision of Mr. Gordon and Robert E. Sherwood, who, also, will be solely responsible for the screen play—just as he was for the film rendition of his "Idiot's Delight."

According to present plans, Mr. Massey and Mr. Sherwood—close friends and associates both in and out of the theater—will go to Hollywood early in the summer to make the picture. When that is completed, Massey will resume his stellar role in the original stage version of the play for a road tour that will commence in Boston in Mid-September and will include all of the major cities in the East and Middle West.

It already has been widely bruited about that "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" brought the highest price ever paid for the screen rights to a successful stage play—some $275,000, unless the figures have been padded between the offices of the Playwrights' Producing Co. and the drama desks, which I very much doubt, knowing the integrity of the gentlemen comprising the Playwrights' Co. as I do. That seems none too high a price for a play that will endure as one of the great dramas of America through long years that are to come. Washington's critical fraternity experiences an extra pulse beat and a little added warmth about the ventricles when it recalls that it was accorded the privilege of being first to hail "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" as great.

There has been a little quiet shenanigan going on at Loew's Palace Theater. Ushered into the loge section for the preview of George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion" on Wednesday night, one was a bit startled to discover a complete metamorphosis in the first balcony fringe of seats that best suits the fluctuating focus of his aging eyes.

Those brass rails that used to whack the loge up into a semblance of "boxes" had disappeared. So had the soft-cushioned and sprawling wicker chairs that were not nailed down and took up too much space. Instead, the loge presented a solid phalanx of new opera chairs, set closely and screwed to the floor and almost as comfortable as the former wicker day-beds. New carpets are being put down, too, and the front segment of the balcony being given a thorough going over, after all these years.

My first impression was that the seating capacity of the loge must have been increased at least one-third. I find now that the increase amounts to only 20 seats. The loge formerly accommodated 108 patrons. Now it will hold 128. But it will never look the same to some of us lazy loungers.

And speaking of the Palace and "Pygmalion," it is interesting to note that at 4 p. m. yesterday the picturization of the Shaw comedy, on its first day of presentation on the "all-day grind" policy, was running ahead of "Test Pilot" and even with "Alexander's Ragtime Band"—two of the most popular pictures the Palace has played in recent months. From every present indication "Pygmalion" will surge ahead of both of the named hits, on the strength of word-of-mouth approval, if nothing else. I never have heard a more spontaneous outburst of applause at the end of a picture than greeted the final fadeout of "Pygmalion" Wednesday night. If it had been a guest audience, it might have been permissible to send out for a grain of salt. From a packed house of ash customers, it was a genuine tribute to the merit of a superlatively fine film play. This would be a fine spot to drop in an "I told you so," if "I told you so's" weren't so specifically banned from this column!

Our old friend John Boles, one of the true gentlemen of the cinema, will appear in person on the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater the week of Friday, March 10, as headliner of the vaudeville portion of the bill. This will mark his first Washington appearance in something like two years. It will be pleasant for those who know him, as well as those who don't—except across the footlights—to have him back. Mr. Boles is as fine as they come.

Paramount Newsreel pictures of Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state under the late Pope Pius XI, who was elected Pope yesterday, are now on view at the Earle Thater. This special Paramount "clip" was rushed to the theater last night.

The Little Princess," Frances Hodgson Burnett's story, which the Children's Theater of New York will present in play form for a single performanc in the National Theater tomorrow morning, was written at 1219 I street in this city. It was there, also, that Mrs. Burnett wrote "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Both brought her fame, both at home and abroad. "The Little Princess" is next to the last presentation of the Children's Theater's current season in the Capital.

Eternal-Unities Note

Orson Welles' production of "Five Kings," on opening night, ran almost five hours. Hope he doesn't cut it down to "Four Kings" until after the Washington engagement!

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, March 2.

PRICE, WATERHOUSE & CO.: This week the Securities & Exchange Commission will name a major accounting firm in connection with an important case now being investigated—not the Coster case . . . Pol. Com. Valentine: Salvy Spitale, the Lindbergh intermediary, whom you arrested Monday for vagrancy, is not a vagrant and has visible means of support—if backing a midtown night club is considered a visible means of support . . . Jimmy Hines: Dixie Davis will settle in California, where he has his money, after his release. He had been ready to apply for admission to the bar there when he learned of his indictment in New York . . . Incidentally, even if the court grants your motion for a certficate of reasonable doubt—you must spend at least a week in the Tombs after sentence and before the motion can be decided.

GROVER WHALEN: Just before she flew back to the Coast, Sally Rand visited the Paradise cafe and offered to work there during the fair for $2,500 a week . . . "$2,500 a week?" replied the startled proprietor, Nicky Blair. "For $2,500 a week I can hire 30 fan dancers" . . . Nicky paused, and added: "That gives me a helluvan.. idea" . . . And so he's hiring 30 fan dancers!

MARY ROGERS: The McNaught Syndicate has signed Neal O'Hara, the veteran newspaper man, to conduct the column they once had employed your father, Will Rogers, to write . . . Senator Bob Reynolds: Listen to Alec Woollcott's special broadcast via N. B. C. on March 7. Woollcott is contributing his services in a broadcast called "Mrs. Vilda's Dream." It will concern refugee children . . . Ben Bernie: Benny the Bum, the Philadelphia cafe owner, is bringing suit against you, because you hired Dee Lloyd McKay, a sepian songstress who sang at his night club. He says he has a managerial contract with her and that you lured her away to join your crew.

MAYOR LAGUARDIA: Because of the excavation work on the new Children's Welfare Building, which adjoins C. C. N. Y.'s Twenty-third street branch, the students and the college professors have been unable to make themselves heard in the classrooms facing that side . . . Many solutions were tried—including the rearrangement of classes away from that side of the building, but these proved unsuccessful because of the crowded conditions . . . But now everybody's happy—because lip-reading has been added, of necessity, to the college curriculum.

GOV. LEHMAN: The State Board of Censors, which banned "Blackwell's Island," and then reconsidered, at first didn't believe that the prison conditions portrayed therein were accurate. The convincer was the discovery that David Marcus, Deputy Commissioner of Correction, was one of the co-authors of the movie—and has the records to attest to its accuracy . . .

IL DUCE: Herb Matthews, the N. Y. Times correspondent who covered the Spanish war from the loyalist side, has returned to New York. He's refused all lecture offers. His next assignment may be to Rome . . . B'way Assn.: Leon & Eddie visited Tony's on the same block, for the first time in seven years, this week. They went there to make a transatlantic telephone call, because the operator wouldn't take it from their booth.

Foregoes Trip

Spencer Tracy, after months of planning, will be unable to take that fishing trip to Acapulco, Mexico, with Director Frank Borzage upon the completion of "I Take This Woman." He must move immediately over to another studio on loan-out.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., March 2.—The twin beds used in a recent picture brought a lot of letters and ridicule calling attention to the fact that twin beds were unknown at the period the play was describing. The "twin or double bed" business, as you have no doubt gathered from news items in the past, has been a matter of deep concern in Hollywood when the interior decoration of a bedroom for the screen was at stake. Modern taste insisting on what would have shocked grandpa.

HEDDA HOPPER

It all made me wonder about the attitude of our Hollywood matrons on the subject. So I called up some of my friends to find out. And was quite delighted with the results.

Some of our happiest couples are double-bedded! They include; Myrna Loy and Arthur Hornblow, the Bob Montgomerys, the Allen Jones, Maureen O'Sullivan and John Farrow, Ronnie Colmans, Gary Coopers, Eddie Robinsons, and the Basil Rathbones. Ouida Rathbone says, "The answer to a successful marriage is a double bed. You may have spats during the day, but you've just got to be friendly in the same bed." She agrees 100 per cent with Napoleon, who said, "As long as Josephine and I shared the same bed everything went right. It was only after we took separate apartments that trouble started."

Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond double-bed it in separate rooms. Claudette Colbert and Dr. Pressman, separate rooms on separate floors, as do the Jesse Laskys and the Charles Boyers. When Charles can't sleep he paces the garden; when Pat's wakeful, she turns on the radio.

Dolores del Rio and hubby, Cedric Gibbons, also separate-floor it, with a trap door into her room. Bet you never thought of that one. And Miriam Hopkins and Director Anatole Litvak sleep in separate houses!

Now, see what the old-fashioned double (and I don't mean features) brought down on your heads! Bob Montgomery says, "What was good enough for my grandfather is good enough for me, Hedda." Atta-boy, Bob!

Uknown youngsters, perishing for movie careers, often wax resentful over the difficulties of getting screen tests. Many seem to think that the studios should give tests to any good-looking, ambitious person who seeks one. But, here is a very good reason—the average test costs close to $10,000. Time, personnel, camera rentals, lighting and film eat into money. And ten grand is an item—even in Hollywood.

Sam Goldwyn's done it again—given the break of a lifetime to a newcomer completely unknown to movie audiences. Only a year ago Sam played Opportunity by knocking on Jon Hall's door and popped that lucky gent right into the leading role of "Hurricane." Now it's Margot Stevenson who, however, is no stranger to Broadway having played the lead in "You Can't Take It With You" on the stage. For her, a long term contract and the feminine lead in the play which will bring Jascha Heifetz right into your favorite movie house. Play's called "The Restless Age"—until they revise the title a few times, as usual.

Gossips say Rhea Gable may become Mrs. Hal Strotz after her divorce becomes final this week.

So the Wally Beerys are dividing! The missus established, for the duration, in Reno, and another divorce impending.

WOW... what luck it's MICKEY as "HUCK!"

Dramatically and emotionally exciting is the thrilling picture made from Mark Twain's beloved book. And his favorite character is played by a boy who was born to be Huckleberry Finn. A boy whose wholesome personality, impish smile and essential "boyishness" proclaim him as the living image of "Huck".

M-G-M proudly offers "Huckleberry Finn" as one of the finest pictures of 1939 – and one that you cannot afford to miss!

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

By Louella O. Parsons.

Copyright, 1939, by International

Hollywood, March 2.—Well, this is interesting news. Zorina, the dancing favorite who captured New York in "I Married An Angel," is headed for Hollywood and Warner Brothers. She will do her ballet numbers in "On Your Toes," the Rodgers and Hart musical comedy which has been adapted for the screen by Jerry Wald and Richard Macaulay. Hal Wallis, who borrowed the comely dance queen from Sam Goldwyn, has still another idea.

LOUELLA PARSONS

He's let Jimmy Cagney, who was a hoofer in the good old days before he won screen recognition, have his heart's desire and co-star with Zorina. Jimmy would rather have this musical comedy than a dozen heavy dramas, although his public does like him in the "Angels With Dirty Faces" type.

George Cukor, who refused to continue directing "Gone With the Wind," moves to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. That wouldn't indicate any trouble with Louis B. Mayer and his associates, now, would it? George is being brought to Leo the Lion's studio to direct Norma Shearer in "The Women," her next movie. Based on the play by Claire Booth Luce. Since George is particularly deft at directing women's stories this should be perfect for him. In the stage play the men are only spoken of—never actually seen. 'Tis said it will be different in the movie and that we will meet the husbands, lovers and boy friends face to face.

When Robert Sherwood said he wouldn't let anyone play "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" but Raymond Massey, who created the role on the stage, he meant it. The playwrights group and producers will bring the popular Lincoln play to the screen with Massey, of course, as honest Abe. The five authors, Sherwood, Sidney Howard, Maxwell Anderson, S. N. Behrman and Elmer Rice, who produced the play jointly, will also share in the picture on a partnership basis.

Chatter in Hollywood: Romantic Naples will be the meeting place of Merle Oberon and Alex Korda, and the marriage will either take place there or on their return to London. All depends on how long Korda can remain away from the studio. But I know if there is a moon over the Bay of Naples when Merle and her fiance meet, studio or no studio, they will marry then and there. She remains in Hollywood only long enough for the gala preview of "Wuthering Heights" at the Carthay Circle.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Florence George and Everett Crosby (Bing's brother) have set May 1 for their wedding day; Errol Flynn, a will-of-the-wisp again. He left Florida and no one knows where he is at this moment. Maybe he is just disappearing to keep the records straight. I hear he is in Mexico City, but don't say I told you; Lupe Velez kept a date in Palm Springs with Wolly Donahue, heir to the Woolworth millions; Ina Claire is in San Francisco killing two birds with one stone—visiting her boy friend and the fair; Bill Powell, tanned and looking so well his friends are rejoicing, back from the desert; Julia Arthur, one-time famous stage star, is visiting California under her married name of Mrs. Cheney; Barnum and Bailey are bidding for Gene Autry for the season; Wallace Ford and Martha, his bride, at the Frank Kerwin's merry-go-round telling friends that Wally has a part in G. W. T. W.

That reminds me. John Balderson is the latest to join the writing marathon on that script; Charlie Blake, Hearst reporter, whose story on the quints made newspaper history, is at Warners working on the Dillinger yarn; Clark Gable, believe it or not, is sponsoring a Boy Scout troop called "Gables Own;" the Rev. Jardine, who married the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, joining Joan Crawford and Charlie Martin, Sally Blane and Norman Foster at Victor Hugos; Constance Collier in Phoenix, Ariz., for a week to visit the Cole Porters. Just before departing she and Charlie Chaplin and the Aldous Huxleys dined at Ruby Foos; David Niven and Robert Coote, British actors, have rented one of Marion Davies' beach houses; Margot Stevenson, recent Hollywood arrival, is seeing the town in company with Dana Andrews, who made a test with her at the Goldwyn Studios. That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Pass Portrait

Madeleine Carroll, Holywood's loveliest star, sailing for a vacation in Europe upon completing her role in "Cafe Society," shattered the tradition that passport photos must be grotesque caricatures. She had a special sitting for a "pass portrait," declaring women should look their best at all times, even on a passport.

Many Lives

J. Carrol Naish maintains his perfect record in "Hotel Imperial," the initial American picture of Isa Miranda. He has been killed in every picture in which he plays a major role.

Like Father

William Harrigan, who portrays one of the important roles in "Back Door to Heaven," produced and directed by William K. Howard, is the son of the late Edward Harrigan, noted actor. Mature devotees of pictures will recall him as a member of the team of Harrigan and Hart.

Sharpshooter

After winning the pistol shooting championship in the United States Marine Corps, Bob Burns, now elevated to stardom in "I'm From Missouri," was presented to the King of Spain and Gen. John J. Pershing on successive days in 1918.

Keith's Offers Premiere of 'Culver' Film

Jackie Cooper Leads Cast That Includes Freddie Bartholomew

By Nelson B. Bell

"SPIRIT OF CULVER." Universal picturization of a screen play by Whitney Bolton and Nathanael West, under the technical supervision of Brig. Gen. L. R. Gignilliatt, U. S. A. Reserves, of Culver Military Academy, cofeaturing Jackie Cooper and Freddie Bartholomew, with Tim Holt, Henry Hull, Andy Devine, Gene Reynolds, Walter Tetley, Kathryn Kane and Jackie Moran. Directed by Joseph Santley. Reviewed, world premiere, Thursday night, at RKO-Keith's Theater.

Accompanied by the rousing strains of martial music, the glare of Klieg lights, the grinding of motion picture cameras and the other concomitants of first nights of distinction in the cinema, "Spirit of Culver" was accorded its world premiere in RKO-Keith's Theater last evening at 7:30, with a large audience—evidently largely made up of fellow-Hoosiers and a goodly number of Culver alumni—in attendance.

It was an appreciative and sympathetic house that viewed the first unwinding of this latest tribute to one of the foremost military academies in the United States and the fine spirit of good citizenship and patriotism with which it imbues its enrollment. The running off of the picture was punctuated by recurrent bursts of applause and its conclusion greeted by rather more than the usual display of enthusiasm. There was something more than mere sentiment to prompt this demonstration.

"Spirit of Culver" is a film play that strikes no new note in the exposition of the strong influence on youth exercised by scholastic halls that have the tang of militarism about them and preach a robust and unimpeachable Americanism. It does, however, go about its task with fine resolution and, after many vicissitudes, contrives to break down the rebellious spirit of an "unassimilated" cadet and point a lesson in character building that should add its need of weight to the season's considerable list of plays, on both stage and screen, that have emphasized the blessings of democracy and the preservation of the tenets of faith upon which this Nation was founded.

Presents Two Facets

The action of the drama, fortunately or unfortunately, divides itself into two distinct parts. The first, dedicating itself principally to the high principles and fine achievements of Culver, is the better of the two. The later sequences of the film trail off into melodramatic episodes that do not entirely uphold the exalted motives that actuate its earlier periods. These climacteric developments of the story, fashioned by Whitney Bolton and Nathanael West, are not without interest, but they seem oddly out of consonance with the spirit and the purpose of the story that have been established in its introductory passages.

The pictured narrative has its inception in the heart of the depression era, when youth is "hitting the road" and finding its only reliable sustenance in soup kitchens. The American Legion in Indianapolis singles out from this rabble of bewildered juveniles a youngster of seemingly more character than the rest to be made the beneficiary of free tuition at Culver. His father was a World War hero, presumably killed in action, upon whom had been conferred the Congressional Medal of Honor for gallantry in action. Tom Allen doesn't fit too well in Culver. His like has been pictured on the screen many times before—the sullen, resentful, belligerent kid, who will have none of what he construes to be "charity" and who makes life much harder for himself than circumstances warrant. It is when his father appears upon the scene that "Spirit of Culver" takes on a slightly tawdry quality. But the eventual redemption of both father and son will be held by many to justify in its every aspect a film play that ends in a blaze of patriotic glory and complete realization of the picture's intention, although possibly by spurious means.

Authentic Culver Scenes

The greater part of the fable's agreeable revelations have the Culver Military Academy, on Lake Maxinkuckee, in Indiana, for their locale. These scenes are authentic and interesting in their depiction of the daily routine of one of the country's most famous military schools and add point to incidents of humor, melodrama, pathos and youthful tragedies and triumphs.

There can be no criticism of the manner in which the pivotal roles in "Spirit of Culver" are acted. Jackie Cooper, as Tom Allen, demonstrates again that he is one of the few "juvenile prodigies" who have been able to bridge the gap between childhood and adolescence with an impressive display of constantly increasing ability as a young actor endowed with what is customarily referred to as the "spark." He turns in an uncommonly fine performance. So does Freddie Bartholomew, as the English youngster who has a firmer grasp of what the tradition of Culver is all about than the American son of an heroic father.

The role of the father is played with as fine effect as might be attained by any actor in so doubtful a role by Henry Hull and Andy Devine contributes notably to the success of the picture in a serio-comic part cut minutely to his measure. There are many youthful players who do much to lend variety to the action.

Mexico's Crisis

Most important of the supplementary features of the new bill at Keith's is the latest issue of "The March of Time," devoted to Mexico's economic and social crisis, and the "Youth Movement" in the United States, as primarily exemplified by the activities of the Boy Scouts. Both are timely and revelatory, as usual, the Mexican footages being particularly illuminating in their frank picturing of the problems that confront President Cardenas, of Mexico.

Next in line come Walt Disney's Donald Duck comedy, "Donald's Lucky Day," and the latest issue of the Pathe News. It all adds up to a diversified and engaging bill, even if not startlingly original in content.

Hitler's 'Death' Is Described In Book by His 'Impersonator'

Fuehrer Poisoned at Dinner With Goering, Goebbels on Eve of Munich, Latest Form of Rumor Relates

By the United Press.

New York, March 2.—One of the most fantastic of underground stories traveling around Europe—that Adolf Hitler is dead—appears in book form today with publication of "The Strange Death of Adolf Hitler."

The story has appeared in rumor form, been hinted at in newspaper and magazine articles. So far, evidence to support it is entirely lacking. Nevertheless, the Macaulay Co., which publishes the book, describes it as "the most important book out of Nazi Germany."

It is anonymous, but the publishers assert it was written by Maximilian Bauer, a soldier of fortune, who resembles Hitler and who, for that reason, was admitted into the inner Nazi circles about the time the Fuehrer came into power six years ago.

Nazis Saved Him

The publishers say the manuscript reached the United States in January by way of courier to Switzerland and, although they admit the dates of Hitler's movements in the book do not check with all of the known facts, every effort was made prior to publication to check the accuracy of the story.

Bauer's yarn is this:

Because of his likeness to Hitler he was arrested by German police in 1933 but saved because the Nazis came into power the next day and the late Ernst Roehm was struck by the possibilities of using him later. Eventually, he says, the Nazis found four doubles for Hitler.

Bauer served as a bodyguard for the Fuehrer by wearing a wig and otherwise disguising himself but meanwhile he was continually studying to impersonate Hitler. He describes in detail such incidents as the Reichstag fire, the purge of the Nazi party, an unsuccessful attempt by three men to assassinate Hitler near Jena several years ago, and other incidents in recent German history. Most of these are described from an anti-Nazi viewpoint.

Made Speech as Fuehrer

Frequently, Bauer writes, he impersonated Hitler. On one occasion he made a speech following the German occupation of the Rhineland and Hitler later congratulated him on it.

The book leads up to the 1938 European crisis and to the eve of the meeting of Hitler, Chamberlain, Mussolini and Daladier at Munich. On that night, Bauer writes, Goering, Goebbels, von Ribbentrop and others, including the author, dined together. And at that meal, he says, Hitler was poisoned with a South American drug. The poisoning was arranged by high officials within the Nazi party, he says.

Ruse Discovered, He Says

"He tried to rise from his seat," the book says, "and he was almost straightened up but with his features scrunched up and his eyes so narrowed they had disappeared. Then with startling suddenness he slumped back on his chair. 'Ach' he half groaned."

When Hitler died a few minutes later, the book adds, the Nazi leaders decided to carry on with the Fuehrer's impersonators. When the book was finished Bauer was still serving as an impersonator, he says, but he feared assassination at any moment. He also says the French Ambassador and a dentist had discovered the impersonation.

Girl Still Missing, Merchant Offers $500 Reward

Pennington Gap, Va., March 2 (AP)—R. H. Darnell, well-to-do merchant, today offered $500 reward for the return of his 25-year-old daughter, Eliza, who has been missing ten days.

Sheriff R. F. Giles said he had little hope that Miss Darnell would be found alive. He expressed the opinion that she had been slain and her body hidden in nearby hills.

The officer discounted Darnell's theory of kidnaping, because no ransom demand has been made.

Brookhart Speaks At Community Center Meeting

The economic problem in the United States can only be solved by paying the farmers enough to enable them to buy the industrial products they need, Smith W. Brookhart, former Senator from Iowa, told the Society of Mutual Benefits last night at a meeting in the Jewish Community Center.

Brookhart declared that "if the farmers' income were increased $8,000,000 half the Nation's unemployed would be put back to work." He outlined in detail existing and proposed plans to help the farmers, including a proposal of his own, which he termed "the only farm relief plan ever devised that would cost the Government nothing."

His plan depends on a fixed price for agricultural products in the internal market, and the export of whatever the farmer could not sell at this price. The Government would take charge of the exports and turn the proceeds over to the farmers.

Suggestions for Bridal Breakfast Given; Culinary Hints on Kumquats and Meat Also Offered; Slit Hatbox Solves Problem

WOULD you like to know the secret of being able to store towering high hats where only squat bowlers and fedoras lurked before? Could you go about your daily housekeeping chores with an easier mind if you knew that you can clean house with a dust mop that costs nothing? Would you like a spicy recipe for that too-little-used fruit, the kumquat?

Are you just now deep in plots for someone's wedding breakfast? Perhaps your own? If any of these questions are the ones you are asking yourself this morning, read on, for the Consumers Counsel has already been queried on them and answers such queries from readers every Friday on the Food Pages.

Here Comes the Bride!

From a reader in Alexandria, comes this query. She writes: "My daughter's wedding will take place at 9 a. m. and I plan to have a wedding breakfast immediately after the ceremony. It will be served in my home and I would greatly appreciate your giving me a menu suitable to the occasion." The following menu is suggested:

Wedding Breakfast

Galantine of chicken, cut in slices on water cress bed. (Or a compote of fresh fruits and strawberries in sherry is easy to prepare and always well liked)
Creamy omelet surrounded with asparagus and peas
Mushroom and roe croquettes (from any favorite fish)
Pistachio bombe or sherbet
Wedding cake, bride's white cake
Spiked punch Black Coffee
Bonbons

Orange Tinted Tips

From a consistently interested reader Mrs. Sara Lee Orange, 1808 I street northwest, comes this note and the time-saving household tips which follow." Once again I have felt the urge to invade your friendly counsel with several hints that have saved the day for me around the home."

Cost-Less Dust Mop

"To make an excellent dust mop, which costs only time, you need a bunch of worn out stockings and socks and a discarded broom. First, cut all stockings the same length. Then cut the strings on the old broom, to get off all the old broom straws. Unwind the wire that is bound around the bottom of the handle, but leave the end attached. Tack stockings to handle, about 3 inches from lower end. Rewind the wire around the hose, drawing it tight with a pair of pliers. Fasten the end of the wire with an upholstery nail into the broom handle, making sure the sharp end is carefully tucked under.

Closet Goes High Hat

"What to do with a great big square hatbox was quite a problem in a small closet. It took up too much valuable space on the lower shelf and couldn't be reached conveniently on the top shelf. I finally decided to slit one side at each corner, all the way down. Now, all I have to do is to reach up, push up the lid, the side drops down, and I can reach in for the hat wanted."

From Mrs. R. W. West, of 1431 Potomac avenue southeast, comes the request for kumquat preserve, which follows:

Kumquat Marmalade

Wash 1 pint of kumquats, slice, discard seeds and add enough water to cover and cook slowly until tender. Measure, add the juice of ½ lemon and water to make 2 cups. Add 3 cups of sugar, mix and boil hard 3 minutes. Remove from fire and add ¼ bottle of pectin gelatin. In sterilized glasses, put 1 tablespoon rubyettes, emeralettes, chopped preserved ginger or a cooked prune cut in eighths. Pour in marmalade and cover with paraffin.

Dietary Dictums

From Maplewood, N. J., comes this query from Mrs. E. Lipis, of 89 Midland boulevard. She voices a plea which many another housewife has asked.

"I wonder if you could send me a few recipes for preparing meat dishes that consist of no frying and no heavy gravies or sauces. I have been alternating with plain broiled steak, broiled liver, lamb chops and veal chops. In my anxiety to vary these dishes somewhat I appeal to you for whatever assistance you might offer me."

Ways With Meats

There are many ingenious ways of varying both the flavor and appearance of the meats you mention, and remain aloof from sauces and rich garnishes. One way is in the method of broiling meats. Try charcoal broiling of steaks and chops rather than oven or pan grilling. The meat tastes better, also, if broiled between hot stones before your own open fire or in your back yard barbecue oven. Any of the meats mentioned are healthful, and offer taste variations if steamed occasionally in a Dutch oven with fresh green peas and onions—no gravy.

Why not try calfs brains, hearts, kidneys or tongue as a change from chops. Lamb patties are appetizing at this time of year and can be slow-broiled as the center of a fresh vegetable casserole. Kebobs or skewers of spring lamb or veal and tomatoes and carrots offer infinite taste variety from steaks and chops. Here is a simple nutritious recipe which might divert your broiling chores into real menu excitement.

Liver With Shirred Eggs

Cut desired number of chicken livers, or young lamb liver, cut fairly fine. Saute in melted butter 15 minutes, seasoning them with salt and pepper. Put 1 spoonful of cream in individual ramekins, break an egg in each and place sauteed chicken livers around edge. Bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F., until eggs are set. Serve from ramekins. Diced cooked veal, crabmeat or shredded cooked chicken may be used in the same way.

Care of Cooking Planks

New broiling planks for steaks and fish usually need a little "tempering." Wash and wipe them dry, then cover with unsalted fat or cooking oil and heat in the oven until sizzling. Cool enough to handle, then wash in warm water and soap suds. Wipe dry and the plank is ready for use. See that all parts of the plank not covered with food are greased with unsalted fat. This helps prevent burning, which is likely to affect the flavor of foods. Wash planks after use as you would any other cooking utensils. Store them perfectly dry.

Hostesses Devise 'Counterfeit' Meat Loaves and 'Mock Chop' for Lenten Dinners

Contestants Laugh; Dishes Are Disguised

Youngsters Pit Skill Against More Seasoned Veterans

By Alice Clayton,
The Post Food Editor.

WASHINGTON hostesses sat back and mocked us this week. As their contributions to the Lenten dish recipe contest, they submitted "Mock Chops," "Counterfeit" meat loaves, fake sausage meat and links, and "Mock Goose" recipes. There was even a robust formula for "Ox Eyes," which was actually a mild casserole of bread rounds in cream sauce with eggs poached atop. Even the least cynical of local homemakers had her little laugh in being able to fool the Lenten season by disguising fish, vegetables, nuts, and grains to taste, and look, like hearty meat entrees.

Noticeable lately among contest entries is the group of new recruits from colleges and private schools. A number of sweet girl undergraduates have been trying their culinary skill against their elders. Some youngsters have pitted their gastronomic wits against those of their more seasoned mothers. One of the most appetizing of the Lenten entries came from a Mary Washington College student for a California Chicken dish. It combined tuna, peas, potatoes and onions in a pleasant tasting scallop.

Also remarked among contestants in the past month or two is the number of masculine cooks competing. Perhaps it was the precedent set by Jerry Galvin two weeks ago, when he won a cash award, but proved to be too bashful to be have his photograph appear on the food page. Now another man has been awarded a prize in today's contest.

Panama Plaudits

The recipe for Pato, which wins first prize of $3.00 today has traveled a roundabout route to attain its award. Mrs. Grace Fay Hiehle, 3422 South Dakota avenue northeast, is the winner, but let her tell in her own words how she came by this recipe. She writes: "My son, a doctor in Panama, was invited to dinner by a celebrated hostess who served an enjoyable entree of roast duck. He told his hostess of my enthusiasm in our local Post contests here and she gave him her prized recipe for Pato which he sent on to me, for for you."

Mrs. Hiehle

PATO

Wash a medium sized duck and dry thoroughly. Rub inside and out with lemon juice. Cut up duck, as you would a chicken for frying. Put in pot, cover with cold water. Add 2 tablespoons of cooking sherry, 1 minced onion, 3 slices bacon cut in small pieces, (if desired); 3 tomatoes, peeled and sliced; 6 green olives, stuffed, and sliced, 1 tablespoon of olive oil, ⅛ teaspoon of sugar, and salt and pepper to taste. Simmer for about 2 hours, or until duck is tender. Remove duck from gravy. To the gravy add a dash of catsup and Worcestershire sauce. Add ½ cup of small seedless raisins, ½ cup of coarsely shredded almonds, and 1 tablespoon of minced parsley. Thicken gravy with flour which has been mixed to a smooth paste in a little cold water. Place duck on hot platter. Pour hot gravy over duck and serve with hot, boiled rice. When duck is removed from pot there should be about 2 cups of liquid left for gravy. If strictly adhering to fish diets during Lent a fish steak may be similarly prepared.

Typical of the zestful and unusual meatless recipes entered in last week's Lenten dish contest is the service, above. Golden brown fresh-from-the-Chesapeake-Bay oysters reside on rounds of toasted English muffins. A spicy pickle-tinged tartar sauce accompanies them, as does also lettuce, lemon squidges and a garnish of stuffed olives. The contest award winners and their Lenten formulas appear on this page

Meat Subterfuge

Sweetbreads are a delicacy much neglected by many cooks. Mrs. Joan S. Malone, the Woodley Park Towers, northwest, is one food expert who knows their dietary value. She recognizes, too, the charm of their flavor when combined with mushrooms. One of the most appealing of the meat substitute dishes entered this week is an a la king entree featuring the mild, sweet flavor of sweetbreads in sherry. She has been awarded second prize of $2 for this.

Mrs. Malone

SWEETBREADS A LA KING

Make a cream sauce of 2 cups of good cream, 1½ level tablespoons of flour and 2 tablespoons of butter. Add 2 raw egg yolks after this has been removed from the flame. The addition of these yolks gives the proper consistency and richness of flavor. Add 1 cup of diced sweetbreads, cooked until tender. Add also ½ pound of freshmush rooms, broiled slowly in butter until tender, but not brown at all. Add a little finely chopped pimentos and green chopped sweet pepper for variety's sake. Sprinkle a little nutmeg or mace, add a small amount of salt and pepper and garnish with a slice of lemon or watercress, if desired. Add a little sherry for piquancy of flavor. This may be served in a border of rice or on fingers of brown, buttered toast. Chicken or tuna may be used in the same manner during Lent, if desired.

There's That Man Again

As J. Burt Price, of 277 Ellis street, Atlanta, Ga., prefaces his recipe in this week's contest. "There's that man again. I don't know whether Atlantans are eligible in The Post Contest, but I have seen your contest rules and they didn't say that Georgians are excluded." The very excellence of Mr. Prices' Lenten recipe would preclude such a question, for his is one of the most agreeable meatless dishes submitted. His blend of nuts and fruits supplies ample protein and energy content.

Salad Entree

Stone 1 cup of canned white cherries and keep them whole. Reserve a few for a garnish and mix the rest with 1 cup of orange sections, cut in halves. Chill well and at time of serving add ½ cup of marshmallows, cut with scissors into small strips. Add ¼ cup of English walnuts, sliced lengthwise very thin. Spread 6 small slices of pineapple with a thin layer of dressing given below. Cover with a spoonful of the prepared fruit, rounding it well. Mask the fruit with dressing and garnish by placing a whole cherry in the center, four strips of pimiento radiating from the cherry. Place 1 small leaf of lettuce at the side of each salad. Grapes, skinned and seeded, may be used in season instead of cherries. For the dressing, heat ½ cup of milk. Mix in ¼ teaspoon of mustard and ⅛ teaspoon of salt and add to 2 eggs, slightly beaten. Combine with milk and cook until thickened, stirring vigorously. Add 2 tablespoons of lemon juice and chill. Whip 1 cup of heavy cream stiff and fold into the dressing. This dressing has an unusual flavor but it blends wonderfully with the nuts and fruits.

Fish for Lent

The majority of Lenten advocates lean toward sea food dishes which possess a really distinctive tang. This is not always so easy to obtain, inasmuch as fish dishes are served the year around, loosing some of their flavor originality thereby. One epicure who has solved the Lenten fish problem is Mrs. Helen Murphy, 2515 Thirteenth street northwest. She has won a prize of $1 for her perfectly balanced flavor blend of nut fritters and broiled halibut.

Broiled Halibut Steak With Almond Fritters

Oil 1 large halibut steak, about an inch thick, on both sides. Dress with 3 tablespoons of melted butter whisked up with the juice of 1 lemon, then a little salt and pepper. Broil. Serve on a hot fish platter, garnished with watercress, clusters of ice cold grapes and hot almond fritters. For the fritters: Put 3 tablespoons of butter and ¼ teaspon of salt in a saucepan with 1 cup of water. Let boil up, remove from fire and stir in ¾ cup of sifted flour—all at once, as for cream puffs. Beat in two unbeaten eggs, 1 at a time. Have 1 cup of almond silvers spread out very thin. Drop the batter by ½ teaspoons onto the nuts. Roll the batter around until covered with nuts. Fry the fritters in deep hot fat until golden brown. Drain them and sprinkle lightly with salt.

Sunday Night Supper

A dish destined for many and brilliant Sunday night suppers is this chocolate pecan waffle entree. It is light and dainty enough for the most epicurean Lenten abstainers. Its generous content of pecans and eggs also makes it sturdy enough fare for the heartier guests. A dash of cinnamon and vanilla gives an illusive zest to this dish when served with scrambled eggs or as a compliment to creamed fish. Miss Jeanette Rosenberg, 431 Hume avenue, Potomac, Va., wins a $1 award for her Lenten choice.

Pecan Chocolate Waffles

Cream ½ cup of shortening, add ¾ cup of sugar slowly. Add 2 eggs, well beaten. Add 1 teaspoon of vanilla extract, 1¼ cups of flour, 1 teaspoon of baking powder, 6 tablespoons of cocoa, ½ teaspoon of cinnamon and ½ teaspoon of salt. Add ½ cup of chopped pecans. Mix well. This makes a very stiff mixture. Heat waffle iron, but not as hot as for breakfast waffles. Place spoonful of mixture in each section of the iron. Bake. Serve with ice cream or whipped cream as the main dish for very special company suppers.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Briton's Epithets Rouse Indignation Of Debs' Escorts

New York, March 2.

OUR CONCERT halls are filled nearly every night during the winter with crowds of well-wishes and relatives come to hail the musical debuts of pretty young girls who warble, or small, hairy boys who scrape the fiddle. Sometimes the coming-out party is a genuine success—then again it seems that the whole matter was ill-advised.

One of the most interesting debuts of the current musical season was that of Louisa Corchia, an 18-year-old girl who was billed as a coloratura soprano. It seems that Louisa and her relatives just couldn't wait. Her uncle Serene, a barkeeper in the neighborhood where Louisa lives, put up $600 for half the cost of Carnegie Hall for the evening, the girl's confident teacher, Seignor Paradis, put up the other half. That was the season's high in confidence.

So there Louisa was, alone on the big stage of Carnegie Hall, and bravely attacking some 16 of the toughest numbers in the soprano repertoire. She was surrounded by loving relatives and friends, she was practically buried under a mountain of flowers, and she did her best. The event merely proved that all concerned had overplayed their hand. Little Louisa just wasn't ready for such a public demontration, and the newspaper critics were very nice about it. One pundit said, "Judgment should be reserved until she comes forward again two or three years hence." It must have been a trying experience for all concerned, especially Louisa, and the lesson is plain. If you have a talent in the family stable, don't open the door and turn it loose until you are absolutely certain it is ready for the races. Louisa must now go back to her practicing.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The young men of New York are in a high dither at present, owing to the uncalled-for cracks of a lad from England named Sir William Becher. This jovial youth was quoted by a reporter as saying that our girls' escorts are "wretched, washed-out and emaciated boys," and that the stag lines at our coming-out parties are composed of "very unattractive college youngsters." Small wonder that the local lads are in a high state of indignation. Incidentally, Sir Willie announced that in his expert opinion the best-looking of the current girl-crop is not Brenda Frazier, but Diana Barrymore Blythe, daughter of dear old John, the Profile. He even said that he thought he'd come back next year and marry Diana—who has not yet been consulted in the matter. I have an idea that boys like Sir Willie do more to ruffle the natural friendship with the motherland than anything else. Of course, it is all very silly and trivial—but it is mildly funny, too . . .

Too bad about Doris Kenyon's marriage to Albert D. Lasker, the big ad man. It lasted less than four months, and Doris told the press the whole thing was a mistake. Nevada will see a period put to the matter. It is hard for us old film fans to realize that Doris' first husband, the handsome actor, Milton Sills, died a decade ago at the height of his career. Doris is still a very lovely woman at 41, and all her old friends are sorry that the Lasker marriage ended so quickly and unhappily.

Dinguses, Thingumbobs, Childlike Frills Adorn Grace Ashley's Latest Fragile Shirtwaist Styles

'Little-Girl-Look' Is Paramount in Newest Creations

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

Sophie was a romantic young girl who suffered in the most realistic manner in French novels. Her sorrows have influenced fashion this season to a pronounced degree, as have also the perils of Pauline and the not-of-this-earth-look of Little Eva. The idea seems to be to compel masculine adoration by sheer fragility and sweetness of demeanor, rather than by daring deeds of chic, which have been considered so vital to the well dressed woman in the past.

Many of the most cautious of the French and American designers have succumbed completely to the little-girl-look for dresses, millinery and all types of capricious accessory designs. To prove their faith in this freshly scrubbed effect, Hollywood and New York have played right into the hands of wide-open baby stares by means of crisp little frocks, ruffled swim suits and play things which reveal crib-time modesty—unmasking everything in fact but the baby's bottom and gurgle. Beware of being too entranced by this air of naive innocence if you're much past your twenties! It may prove the downfall this year of many an otherwise sagaciously groomed woman.

One of the native designers who has taken the little girl look neatly in her stride is Grace Ashley. After six lucrative years of creating jewel-studded shirtwaist dresses, millinery and all types of capricious accessory designs. To prove their faith in this freshly scrubbed effect, Hollywood and New York have played right into the hands of wide-open baby stares by means of crisp little frocks, ruffled swim suits and Fine tailoring and a touch of sentimentality characterize this Grace Ashley shirtwaist frock which also features the schoolgirl or "Sophie" look. Feminine details include the pink suede belt, naive pique collar, and the padlocked hearts that replace the former stud closings.

Her new Sophie dress, pictured on this page, has the same exact tailoring, the same trig bow and hankie pocket and the same adaptability to office, schoolroom and street wear. But Sophie rears her lovely wan head behind all this rigidity. She and her wide-eyed stare are seen in the blithely swinging skirt, knife pleated all around, and shorter than it has been since readin' and writin' days.

Such sentimental whimsies are seen in the new Grace Ashley frocks as padlocked hearts, complete with keys, instead of last year's more masculine studs. Gold metal bugles tinkle now instead of studs. White bones button the doggy pattern in Ashley's shirtwaist frock. There are ga-ga crystal clusters or coins for buttons to harmonize with coin bracelets and matching earrings. Covarrubias, the imaginative illustrator and textile designer, even created Telavera roses as wistful trimmings for some of Grace Ashley's demure pastels. Circus dots, whippet and cockatoo patterns or quaint snowdrop prints in the fabric line should bring out the small girl in many a youthful mother with small girls of her own.

Sweethearts Quarrel; Girl Asks Forgiveness But Man Remains Obstinately Noncommittal; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been engaged to a man in a distant city for a year. We see each other about once a month. I have not yet set the date for marriage, although he wants me to do so. On his last visit here we quarreled and I did something that hurt him very much. I am sorry and wanted him to know it—so I wrote a letter trying to explain myself and followed up the letter with a telephone call. He was non-committal in conversation and has not answered the letter.

In the past he had an unhappy love affair, and I believe he knows that I did, also, although I am not certain. But once he said: "We are both afraid of being hurt." He also thinks I am not willing to accept what he has to offer me. But the problem is this: I want to make amends and am willing to do whatever I should do to bring about peace. I am also prepared to set the marriage date.

Do you think I could or should make further overtures, such as going to see him? If he no longer loves me and no longer wants to marry me, and I knew it, I would just have to accept it. I don't want to "run after" him. But there is one more complication: I have been offered another job in his city. He does not know this. I would accept it if we were to be married. Otherwise, I would remain here. Under the circumstances, I don't know what to do. I shall appreciate your opinions—and an early reply.

BARBARA.

The Test of Grace

DEAR BARBARA: While there may be a few rare and precious love relationships which unfold in symphonic harmony, with never the faltering sour note of a painful misunderstanding, angry dispute or temporary estrangement—nevertheless, the average courtship does not proceed so smoothly. At least one lovers' quarrel is almost bound to darken the sky with storm clouds, sooner or later. And it serves an instructive and useful purpose. It is a searching test of grace for both parties (and I use grace in the sense of "pleasing or charming characteristic.)" It establishes, rather definitely, the capacity (or incapacity) of each to rise unselfishly to an occasion which, if it is to be properly met, calls for prompt reciprocal display of constructive and sincere generosity of feeling.

It appears that, in this instance, you met the needs of the occasion bravely and with a commendable show of grace. Believing (or knowing) yourself to be in the wrong, you went on record to that effect and contritely asked to be forgiven. But your fiance, in refusing to meet your conciliatory overtures half way, in failing to acknowledge your letter or to clarify his attitude in conversation, has—it would seem—fallen down rather badly. He is going far toward labeling himself a churl—tainted with a streak of mean-spirited, vengeful obstinacy—in maintaining a sulky silence.

If your offense was so outrageous, or cut so deeply, as to be fundamentally unforgiveable, from his point of view; or if it betrayed, to his way of thinking, qualities in your nature which he profoundly distrusts, and which he believes contain a serious threat to conjugal happiness—then he ought to say so, candidly and kindly. In so doing, he would be making his own position clear, and at the same time paving the way for a helpful discussion of the regrettable episode, which might lead to a mutually satisfactory healing of the breach. Supposing you are deserving of stern rebuke and have sore need to take stock of individual shortcomings, such an attitude would be best calculated to inspire you to lasting reform.

This man's love for you is a poor gift, indeed, if it is to be withdrawn at the first rebuff. It is insecurely founded and has no dependable staying qualities. Beware of the man whose spontaneous gesture, when a dispute arises with his lady love, is—actually or figuratively—to reach for his hat and make for the door. That gesture is an indelible and almost ineradicable trademark of infantilism or immaturity—and it is a gesture employed by a dismayingly considerable number of so-called men. What it means is, "You've got to handle me with kid gloves, or you'll be sorry. I'll make you pay a thousand-fold for this (supposed) insult to my blistered ego." And there is absolutely no way of dealing with it, excepting either to abase yourself continually in what usually is a futile effort to keep the peace, or to hustle the man through the door and keep that door permanently closed against him thereafter.

It is possible, of course, that you have been playing a rather insufferably coy or coquettish game with this man; that, intoxicated with a sense of your power over him, you have deliberately kept him uncertain, jealous and unhappy; and that your latest offense was the straw that broke the camel's back of his anguished long suffering. If that should be the case, it may be worth your while to belly-crawl a bit in an effort to re-build the ruins you have created. You may have to take your punishment—even as he may have taken his—with no great certainty of being rewarded.

But if such is not the case, you have every right to preserve a certain measure of pride and self respect in the circumstance. Since the offer of a job in his city is hanging fire, and since your decision to accept or reject it depends on his temper, I believe you would be justified in going to see him (if such a trip is immediately convenient) and talking the whole thing through. Many things can be settled in conversational exchange which never could be adequately dealt with by letter or telephone. The face-saving justification of your trip is provided by the job offer; but if he remains ungraciously obstinate and non-committal during that visit, I think you may as well call the whole thing off, and be thankful that your essential incompatability was uncovered before marriage.

Among the Squirrels

"I met a neighbor of yours the other day—a Mrs. Heep."

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Heep! Isn't she fascinating? She collects Venetian glass."

"Well, this friend of mine who introduced us—she has a perfectly marvelous collection of old whisky jiggers. Oh, say, maybe you know her—Mrs. Remington Hunt?"

"No . . . Now, I know a Mrs. Huntington who collects andirons . . ."

"Well, this must be a different woman. Her husband—he has one of the biggest collections of meerschaum pipes east of the Mississippi—is with Sailem's. Say, I tell you, she's a great friend of Mrs. Jock Monkton.

'Monkton?"

"Yes. You know . . . the one's who's got the collection of hand organs."

"Oh, of course! Yes! Oh, that reminds me! I ran into your cousin Grace the other day. I think she's so attractive."

"Yes, Grace is a very lovely person She collects early American feather beds. Did you ever meet my cousin Ruth—Mrs. Marcus Stack?"

"Is she the one that has the old pewter?"

"No, she has the old warming pans It's my Aunt Nannie that has the pewter."

"How is your Aunt Nannie?"

"She's just fine. She's started a collection of advertising dodgers."

"Advertising dodgers?"

Yes, those things they put under your door . . . and in the yard. You know you'd be surprised how it's changed her outlook on life."

"Say, I hear Lucia Hoardem's a lot better."

"Oh, yes . . . Lucia. Hasn't she the most marvelous assortment of antique silver you ever saw?"

"Yes, but she's collecting telephone books now. That was on thing that was the matter. She had so much trouble with the telephone company about it and got all upset . . ."

"Those books ought to be valuable some day. Just think how much fun it will be 100 years from now looking up those old numbers! Did you know Lucia's sister Hazel was in the hospital?"

"She is! What's the matter?"

"Oh, I don't know. Of course Hazel's always been a neurasthenic."

"Hazel needs a hobby."

"Well, of course, George has that wonderful collection of moose heads."

"George is a marvelous man."

"Yes, but Hazel doesn't appreciate him."

"Oh, say, before I forget it, do you know a woman named "Bloke?"

"Bloke?"

"Mrs. Marcus Bloke. I met her the other day and she said she knew you well."

"Bloke? . . . Bloke? . . . What does she collect?"

"Nothing, as far as I can find out."

"Blowe? . . . Bloke? . . . Why, I haven't the slightest idea who she can be."

For Tired Face

When you are tired, not quite up to par, but want to look your best—try a mask treatment for a quick pick-up.

Here's a recipe for a homemade mask that is simple to make and easy to use. Take three tablespoons of starch (which can be obtained at the grocery store for facial use), add one teaspoonful of make a soft paste. Apply this glycerin and enough milk to mixture to your face and neck—after a thorough soap-and-water cleansing, of course—and relax for 15 minutes or so while the mask is drying. Then rinse well with warm water, finish with a dash of icy cold water, and pat your face and neck dry.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Actress Reduces Hip Measure 3 Inches In Two Weeks to Comply With New Role

HOW MANY actresses, we wonder, perform heroic feats of slimming to capture those fat and fairly raer roles that make for fame? The other day we heard of a top-flight motion-picture player who flew into New York and registered at a Fifth avenue salon that turns out figures like a John LaGatta sketch.

She had been promised a certain choice role if her hip measurement were three inches less in two weeks! She didn't need to diet. Her weight was all right. All she had to do was work off those extra hip inches. At the end of two weeks her figure was perfect and she was on her way back to Hollywood and that contract.

How did she do it? She had been instructed to repeat each of a set of exercises 300 times a day . . . so she did them 3,000 times every day! You didn't read about her doing the night clubs—she was too busy doing her home work!

So strenuous an exercise program is certainly not recommended for the average woman. You couldn't exercise that much. It might endanger your health. And if the actress had been doing her special exercises every day for only 15 minutes, she would never have needed to work so hard.

The whole point is that you cannot keep a slim hipline unless you do exercise. We all sit too much, and whatever weight we have gravitates to this measurement. You may have too little weight, too much or be just right, and still have a hip problem. You may be a thin girl with lumpy hips, or a stocky girl with chunky hips, or a normal weight with hips. The answer to a hip problem is always the same—exercise!

Rolling is one of the best hip reducers and also one of the easiest. You can roll as long as you please. And here is a special way of rolling to reach those annoying fat pads on the sides of the hips: Lie on the back on the floor, with knees drawn up to the chest, arms straight out at the sides on the floor. Drop the knees over on the floor at one side, pull them up toward the outstretched arm and draw them back to the chest. Then drop the knees over to the other side and repeat the performance. Keep the upper back flat on the floor, rolling at the waist. You will notice that drawing the knees up toward the arm has a grinding effect on the fat pad at the side of the hip. This is one of the exercises our ambitious actress included in her Amazonian workout.

Kicking is still the world's most streamlining exercise, but it is strenuous. Begin your kicking routine with no more than ten kicks a day and increase the number very slowly. Sideward kicking strengthens the inner thigh muscles while slimming the hips. Stand first with the feet together and swing alternate legs in wide outward circles, trying to keep the foot at the same height throughout. In backward kicking, support yourself with one hand on a chair-back at the side. Swing the legs from the hips and up in back, trying to swing a little higher each day. Try to hold the upper part of the body erect as you kick.

Chocolate Recipes May Win Awards

When chocolate is mentioned, the first thought that comes to mind is fudge or chocolate cake and ice cream. There are so many more delicious chocolate-flavored foods that they number into the hundreds. Mrs. Barbara Lipscomb, 934 New York avenue northwest, is a chocolate enthusiast and believes in the energizing and appetizing virtues of the tropical cocoa bean.

In accordance with Mrs. Lipscomb's recent request that chocolate foods be made the theme of the new recipe contest, any type of chocolate dish will be eligible for one of five cash awards. There will be a first prize of $3, a second of $2 and three additional prizes of $1 each. All recipes must be neatly written and mailed to Alice Clayton, The Post Food Editor, before March 11.

Kitchen-test all recipes before entering this competition, as practicality of formulas counts as much as originality. Your favorite chocolate dish may be in the cake line—say, angel food, chocolate butter-frosted cup cakes or fudge brownies. You may incline toward the wholesomeness of chocolate bread pudding, blanc-mange, steamed cocoa pudding or a peppermint-chocolate tinged custard.

Irimescus Are Hosts At Dinner

American Minister To Switzerland, Who Was to Be Honor Guest, Is Absent

WASHINGTON HOSTESSES are getting accustomed to giving dinners this winter at which the guest of honor can't appear at the last moment. The prevailing flu, international complications, and diplomatic mourning have been playing havoc with many a local party.

The United States Minister to Switzerland and Mrs. Leland Harrison were to have been honor guests at the dinner which the Rumanian envoy and Mme. Irimescu gave last night at the legation just off Sheridan Circle. But owing to a death in Mr. Harrison's family the couple had to leave suddenly for New York. They have been staying with Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett.

However, the Irimescus dinner went off as planned. The guests were the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, and his brother, Count Alfred, who is visiting him for a few days en route to the South; the Swedish Minister and Mme. Bostrom; Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis—Senator Lewis is ill with a cold; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, the Charge d'Affaires of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Huneeus, Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and Mrs. Eccles; the Assistant Financial Counselor of the legation and Mme. Dmitriu, Mr. and Mrs. George Garrett, George T. Summerlin, chief of protocol of the State Department, and his daughter-in-law, Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr.

Miss Cotter Fetes Tomorrow's Bride

Another party given last night was that at which Miss Madeleine Cotter entertained in honor of Miss Vola Drury, whose wedding to Lieut. Carlton Adams, U. S. N., will take place tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock. Miss Cotter is to be a bridesmaid.

The party, which was a buffet supper, followed the wedding rehearsal at St. Alban's Church. The guests were seated at small tables centered with all-white flowers to carry out the bridal motif.

The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Hartson, uncle and aunt of the bride; Miss Mary Frances Hartson, of Seattle, who will be maid of honor; Mrs. O. Sherman Yale of Providence, R. I., the matron of honor, and several of the bridesmaids, among them Miss Elizabeth Heineman, of Los Angeles; Miss Marian Lum, of New York, and Miss Helen Kean.

Miss Heineman Guest of Bride

Miss Heineman is staying with Miss Drury. Lieut. B. F. Roedler, U. S. A., will be the best man at the wedding.

Other guests last evening were Miss Mary Catherine Mundell, William McEvoy, and Misses Margaret, Clare and Dorothy Cotter, sisters of the hostess, William Helvestine, and Lieuts. Thomas Marshall, Elzin Hahn, B. F. Roedler, A. F. Spring, Harry Smith and Thomas Purvis.

Betty Guider, young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Guider, will be flower girl at the wedding.

Rep. Joseph Smith Entertains at Dinner

Representative Joseph J. Smith entertained at dinner in the Shoreham Blue Room last evening with Senator Francis T. Maloney as the ranking guest.

Others present were the host's mother and sister, Mrs. James E. Smith and Miss Margaret Smith, of Waterbury, Conn.; Dr. and Mrs. Robert W. Bolwell, Miss Eleanor Nurnane and Dr. Daniel Lynch.

Notables Sail On Normandie

When the French Line flagship Normandie pulls away from her dock at 2 p. m. today, she will carry a number of socially prominent persons well-known in Washington.

Prince Eugene de Ligne, former Counselor of the Belgian Embassy here, is returning after a visit in Washington. Also on board will be Mrs. Charlotte Brown Nast, former Capital resident who now has a house in London. She visited Mrs. George Grant Mason, jr., of Washington, during her stay in this country.

Baroness Eugene de Rothschild will be on board en route to her home in Paris. She has been in New York since leaving the Capital, where she attended a dance given by the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, and a number of other smart parties.

Rene LeRoy, well known flutist, who played at the White House and at the French Embassy earlier this winter, is also a passenger on the Normandie. Others include Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Miller and Hector Bolitho, English author, who was the guest of Clarence Hewes at his Washington residence last month.

Mrs. A. S. Henning Entertains for Mrs. Mulford

Mrs. Arthur Sears Henning entertained at a luncheon yesterday in honor of Mrs. Frank Mulford, of Chicago, who is visiting Mrs. Carlton Holdrege.

The other guests were Mrs. Holdrege, Mrs. Laurence Vincent Benet, Mrs. John Dwight, Mrs. Robert W. Chambers and her daughter, Mrs. Robert W. Chambers, jr., Miss Eleanor Connolly, Mrs. Randolph Minor and Mrs. William S. Culbertson.

Miss Barbara Henning, debutante daughter of the hostess, will leave today to attend the Saturday hop at West Point.

Hull Aide to Be Honor Guest At 'Diplomatic Ride' Today

Foreign Representatives to Turn Out in Force for Exhibition Drill in Fort Myer Riding Hall

Honoring the State Department and the Diplomatic Corps, the exhibition drill in the riding hall at Fort Myer this afternoon will be dedicated to them.

The Assistant Secretary of State, Francis B. Sayre, will be the honor guest and will receive the 17-gun salute upon his entry to the post, following which he will be escorted throughout the post by the escort of honor to the riding hall, where he will receive the honors at the exhibition drill.

The "Diplomatic Ride," as it is called, is an annual event, and one at which the Diplomatic Corps turns out in full force. Among the ranking guests from the foreign embassies who have signified their intention to be present are: The British Ambassador, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki; the Ecuadorean Ambassador, Captian Colon Eloy Alfaro; the French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin; the Colombian Ambassador, Miguel Lopez Pumarejo; the Swedish Minister, Wollmar Bostrom; the Guatemalan Minister, Adrian Recinos; the Portuguese Minister, Antonio de Bianchi; the Minister of El Salvador, Hector David Castro; the Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos; the Minister of Latvia, Dr. Alfred Bilmanis, and the Minister of the Dominican Republic, Andres Pastoriza.

Also the Minister of Costa Rica, Ricardo Castro Beeche; the Panamanian Minister, Dr. Augusto S. Boyd; the Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, Vladimir Hurban; the Nicaraguan Minister, Dr. Leon De Bayle; the Minister of the Irish Free State, Robert Brennan, and the Egyptian Minister, Mahmoud Hassan Bey.

2 Diplomats, Wives Are Entertained

The South African Minister and Mrs. Ralph William Close and the United States Ambassador to the Argentine and Mrs. Alexander W. Weddell were honor guests at a luncheon given at the Willard yesterday by the English-Speaking Union. The Bishop of Washington, the Rev. James E. Freeman, presided.

At the head table were the Naval Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Curzon-Howe, Bishop and Mrs. Freeman, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Victor Mallet, counselor of the British Embassy; Dr. C. G. Abbot, director of the Smithsonian Institute, Mrs. James Oliver Murdock, Lynch Luquer and the guests of honor.

Mrs. Phillips Gives Cocktail Party at Home of Sister

Mrs. Duncan Phillips entertained yesterday afternoon at a cocktail party at her home in honor of Miss Marjorie Sherley.

Assisting during the afternoon were Mrs. Daniel Partridge, who is Mrs. Phillips' sister; Mrs. Swager Sherley and Mrs. William R. B. Acker.

Mrs. Acker, who is the sister-in-law of Mrs. Phillips and the sister of Miss Sherley, will leave early in May for Leyden, to make her home. Her husband is a member of the Freer Art Gallery staff and for several years Mr. and Mrs. Acker resided in Japan, returning to this country only about a year ago.

Sponsors Named For College Show

Numerous members of the Diplomatic Corps have been added to the list of sponsors for the Chevy Chase Junior College's musical comedy, "Just Listen to This." The curtain will go up on the production on March 10.

Among them are Mme. Radu Irimescu, wife of the Rumanian Minister; Mme. Abhibal Rajamaitri, wife of the Minister of Siam; Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister; Senora de Alfaro, wife of the Minister of Ecuador; Senora de Boyd, wife of the Minister of Panama, and Senora de Castro Beeche, wife of the Costa Rican Minister.

Still other sponsors, recently added to the distinguished list, are Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Senand Mrs. Millard F. Tydings, Senator and Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Representative and Mrs. Ralph O. RFC Chairman Fetes Press Staff

Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, who is vacationing at the Miami Biltmore in Florida, gave a cocktail party Wednesday for the White House press staff who were also there during the course of the President's cruise. The party was given aboard Fred Fisher's yacht, Nakhada.

The guests were D. Harold Oliver and Mrs. Oliver, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Storm, George E. Durno, Mr. and Mrs. Felix Belair, John O'Donnell, William C. O'Brien, J. C. Brown, F. I. Thompson, George Skadding, C. S. Linkins and J. N. Willis.

Earl H. Popes In Philippines

Lieut. and Mrs. Earl Hallett Pope, who were married February 9 in Manila, are both Navy people and have traveled so much in recent years that they decided they were tired of it and wouldn't take a honeymoon. So after their wedding, which was performed by Lieut. Comdr. C. A. Neyman, U. S. N., they settled down to reside in the Philippine capital.

The bride is the former Miss Eleanor Holley Baker, daughter of Capt. Cecil Sherman Baker, U. S. N., and Mrs. Baker, who are making their home in Washington. Lieut. Pope is the son of Rear Admiral Ralph Pope, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Pope, and a nephew of Capt. David W. Todd, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Todd.

The ceremony was performed at the home of Capt. Riley F. McConnell, U. S. N., and Mrs. McConnell, who are occupying the residence, with grounds sloping to the sea, built by the former Governor of the Philippines, Cameron Forbes. While the orchestra from the flagship Augusta played the wedding march, the bride, escorted by Capt. McConnell, made her way across the broad lawn towards the improvised altar placed against a group of pandanus and palms arranged in a U shape, with the sea wall, Manila Bay, and the approaching sunset as background.

The bride wore an embroidered white net frock with a full skirt trimmed with bands of shirring. A white picture hat completed her costume and she carried madonna lilies and white gladioli.

Two tall white columns, upon which were placed large seashells filled with gardenias and white gladioli, flanked the altar rail, which also was decked with gardenias.

Lieut. John H. Keatley, U. S. N., served as best man.

A supper folowed the ceremony. The wedding cake, presented to the bride by Commander Kinley, of the Empress of Canada, was decorated with nautical details, anchors and life buoys, topped by a miniature destroyer and a silver bell, emblematic of the bridegroom's present duty.

Mrs. Pope is the fourth generation of service families in the Army and Navy. Her grandfather was the late Capt. Asher Carter Baker, U. S. N., and her great grandfather was Col. William Reese, U. S. A. Gen. W. T. Sherman was her great-great-uncle. Other uncles of hers are Col R. Charles R. Lloyd, U. S. A., retired; Col. Alexander Cooper, U. S. A., and Lieut. Col. Warren Fales, U. S. A.

Miss Esther Meyers Wed to M. A. Levi

Of interest to Washington is the wedding of Miss Esther Meyers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Meyers, of Memphis, Tenn., to Malcolm A. Levi, of Washington, which took place in Memphis last evening at the Peabody Hotel.

The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Harold H. Levi, of Washington, and the late Mr. Levi. He had as his best man Benjamin Frank of this city. Others present from Washington were his mother, Mrs. Levi; Mr. and Mrs. Harold H. Levi, jr., Stuart Levi and Donald Levi.

Following a wedding trip to Bermuda, the couple will reside at 2915 Connecticut avenue here, where they will be at home after March 20.

Eichers Give Dinner For the Rev. Scherf

Edward E. Eicher, Securities and Exchange commissioner, and Mrs. Eicher entertained at dinner last night in honor of the Rev. John Scherf, of West Point, Iowa, who is visiting Washington.

The other guests were the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, Senator Clyde Herring, the Rev. Maurice Sheehy, the Rev. Joseph B. Code and Miss Katheryn Palin.

Congressional Wives Hold Luncheons

Club Is the Scene Of Several Large And Gay Parties

The Congressional Club was the scene of seceral large and gay luncheons yesterday when wives of Senators and Representatives entertained for their friends.

Mrs. Martin F. Smith, wife of the Representative from Washington, and Mrs. Anthony J. Dimond, wife of the Delegate from Alaska, entertained 35 guests at a table decorated with spring flowers. At each guest's place there was a corsage of violets centered with a pink rose.

Charles Gaines Gives Cocktail Party To Celebrate His Dog's First Anniversary

TWO FIGHTS and one budding romance among the guests was the final score when Charles Gaines' cocktail party broke up yesterday afternoon. The party was to celebrate the first birthday of "Buppy," the host's little black cocker spaniel, and the guests were several other canines with their owners.

Mrs. Rogers Barker arrived with her cocker, "Joker," in tow, followed by "Miss Jones," who was straining at the leash held by her owner, Mary Louise Marsh. Peggy Townsend brought her black cocker, "Monk;" Mrs. Hugh O'Donnell came with "Schwartzie," her long haired dachsund; and Mary Bradley's police dog "Tex" was the biggest dog there. Helen Davis arrived dogless, having left her "Miss Jones" home for safety.

The host's apartment in Georgetown, which he shares with James Penfield, was the scene of the party. Supper began with "shredded wheat a la Buppy with garniture of cod liver oil" and ended with "spigot water." Each dog was given a rubber bone as a favor.

MARTHA and Virginia Bacon and Mimi Scott have joined the Washington colony at St. Sauveur. Barbara Korff, who has been living in New York for the past few years, is also there, but will come next week for a visit with her mother, Baroness Serge Korff, at her home on Foxhall road.

Life in the Canadian ski village is much simpler than at Sun Valley. Returning visitors say that there are no nightclubs to interfere with their health program, which seems just as well, as they have difficulty in keeping their eyes open after 10 o'clock. The favorite drink in St. Sauveur is hot-buttered rum, and the favorite hang-outs are the Alpine Inn, in nearby St. Marguerite, and the Pub and the Italians in St. Sauveur. Nobody bothers with evening clothes.

SENATORS and Representatives are being hounded even more than usual these days by people who want tickets for the celebration to take place in the Capitol tomorrow morning. One man even wires that if he could get a place he would fly here from the Middle West just to be present. Many Senators' wives are giving their tickets to distinguished guests here for the stunt party tonight of the Women's National Press Club.

NO WONDER opera singers are inclined to be hefty. The other afternoon, we hear, Kirsten Flagstad, her brother and two friends sat down for lunch at 2:30 and got up from the table four hours later. As hors d'oeuvres they had each half a broiled lobster, scrambled eggs and smoked salmon. A bottle of wine accompanied the steak. With the next course, fresh asparagus, came a bottle of champagne, followed by cheese and crackers with claret. After dessert the men polished off the meal with a bottle of beer each.

It makes us wish we'd observed Miss Flagstad more closely when we met her at the recent late supper given for her and Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ormandy by the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George Messersmith.

SENATOR ROBERT TAFT gets more mail than almost any other member of Congress. In two days he recevied 25,000 letters and telegrams on the subject of lifting the Spanish embargo.

Mrs. McLean Aids Benefit

With Mrs. Evelyn Walsh McLean as chairman, the Palm Beach cavalcade luncheon for the benefit of the Y. W. C. A. will be one of the outstanding events of the winter season in Miami, Fla., where it will take place at historic Whitehall March 15.

Vice chairman for the event is Mrs. M. Taylor Pyne, and Miss Clair Corroon is chairman of the junior committee. Mrs. Frank C. Henderson is in charge of assembling gowns worn in years past at many of the famous Palm Beach balls. She will show the most famous gown of her collection, one worn by Queen Alexandra on state occasions at Buckingham Palace.

Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury heads the list of patronesses, which includes many members of international society. Among others are Mrs. J. Jay O'Brien, Mrs. Grover Loening, Mrs. Roscoe Tate Anthony, Mrs. Peter A. B. Widener, 2d, Mrs. Henry L. Doherty, Mrs. James Reeves, Mrs. Barclay H. Warburton, Miss Carolyn Trippe, Mrs. W. Longfellow Foulke, Mrs. Henry R. Rea, Mrs. Aksel C. P. Wichfeld, Mrs. Claude K. Boettcher and Mrs. James P. Donahue.

Members of the Palm Beach younger set will serve as junior patronesses. They will model gowns of the past and the last word in present resort fashion. They include Miss Mary and Miss Fernanda Munn, Miss Evelyn W. McLean, Miss Claire Corroon, Miss Jeanne and Miss Eileen Stafford, Miss Ann and Miss Mary Alice Amory, Miss Eleanor Meem, Miss Anne Wright and Miss Shirley Bell.

Miss Mabel Boardman Arrives at Palm Beach

Miss Mabel Boardman has arrived in Palm Beach for a visit with Mrs. E. H. G. Slater at her villa.

The Postmaster General, James A. Farley, who has been spending a fortnight at the Miami Biltore, left yesterday to return to Washington. He was host at a farewell dinner at the hotel Wednesday evening.

Guggenheim Bridal Held

Of interest to Washington is the announcement from Port Washington, Long Island, of the marriage last Wednesday of Miss Nancy Guggenheim, daughter of Mrs. Harold S. Matzinger and of Harry F. Guggenheim, former United States Ambassador to Cuba, to George T. Draper, son of Mrs. Tuckerman Draper, of New York, and of Dr. George Draper, of Armonk Village, N. Y.

The ceremony took place in the home of Miss Guggenheim's father, in the presence of the two families. Surrogate Leone D. Howell, of Nassau County, officiated. No announcement of the couple's engagement had been made.

The bride, an accomplished horsewoman, was graduated from the Santa Barbara Girls School and from the Columbia University Business School. For the last three years she has been studying at the American Ballet School of Dancing.

The former Miss Guggenheim is a granddaughter of the late Daniel Guggenheim, industrialist and philanthropist, [redacted] of the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics, of which her father was president from 1926 to 1930. Her great-grandfather was the late Meyer Guggenheim, founder of the Guggenheim fortunes.

The bride's father, who has been chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Control of Crime in New York, is an aviation enthusiast and caused considerable comment while he was Ambassador by flying from his post in Havana to his home on Long Island. Mrs. Draper is also a niece of Simon Guggenheim, former Senator from Colorado.

The bridegroom, who recently returned to this country after serving with the Red Cross in Spain, was graduated from the Avon School and attended Columbia University, where his father is associate professor of clinical medicine.

A great-grandson of the late Charles A. Dana, Mr. Draper is a grandson of the late Dr. and Mrs. William H. Draper, of New York.

20th Century Club Will Aid Gallinger

Gift of Occupational Therapy Equipment for Crippled Children And Library to Mark 50th Year

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Occupational therapy equipment for crippled children and a library room will be the gift of the Twentieth Century Club to Gallinger Hospital next year in celebration of the club's golden anniversary. Decision on the project was made by ballot at the monthly meeting in Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. yesterday morning. Between $2,000 and $2,500 will be raised.

The plan of making a contribution to civic or welfare work was approved by the club when celebration of the golden jubilee was first discussed. Suggestions have been coming in ever since as to the nature of the project. From among the many, five were selected from which the club would choose. At the business meeting yesterday morning, Mrs. Edward G. Montgomery, the president presided.

Mrs. R. Thomas West Speaks for Gallinger

Mrs. R .Thomas West described the needs at Gallinger Hospital and the benefit to the children of occupational therapy equipment. The first vote was a tie between this and an endowment fund for Goodwill Industries, the project on which Mrs. Karl Fenning, former club president, spoke. Other welfare projects suggested were a convalescent home for girls of high school age who needed special care following an illness, to be established in connection with Holiday House of the Girls Friendly Society, and assistance to the Self-Help Exchange. Mrs. Willoughby Chesley presented the Girls Friendly plan and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, that for the Self-Help.

Jessie A: Arndt

The fifth suggestion had a particular interest for the club because it involved the work of one of the members, Mrs. Harold Fowler, an artist. It was a plan to give to the city either a bird bath or a sundial of her design. A model of the piece was shown and the plan presented by Mrs. Lawrence Martin.

Benefit Card Party Announced

The first benefit affair to be given in connection with the newly chosen project will be a card party at the Raleigh Hotel Easter Monday, April 10. Mrs. Montgomery announced Mrs. Richard D. Stimson as general chairman. Assisting her will be Mrs. James Robertson and Mrs. John B. Gordon, in charge of cigarette candy and cake; Mrs. Virgil Jackson and Mrs. Nathan Grover, tickets; Mrs. John Ladd, the white elephant table; Mrs. Elmer Frazier, prizes; Mrs. Howard Nichols, arrangements; Mrs. W. Hayes Yeager, treasurer and Mrs. William T. Clerk, chairman of the floor committee.

After the business meeting, Dr. Fritz Marti, professor of philosophy and esthetics at the University of Maryland, was presented as guest speaker and discussed "Fashions in Esthetics." Dr. Marti drew a distinction between true art expressing some fundamental concept of the artist and that which is not wholly his own but reflects a trend or is reportorial. The mass of works in the latter category he classed as "the literature" of art, some good and some bad but all falling short of art in its truest sense. He illustrated his lecture with slides, showing famous pictures.

Dr. Marti is now engaged in completing the translation of Schelling's "Lectures on Methods of Academic Study," to be published in the spring.

Mrs. Frankfurter To Attend Smith Alumnae Dinner

Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, a Smith alumna of 1912, will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by the Smith College Club of Washington, Monday, at the Kennedy-Warren.

Following the dinner there will be reports of the Alumnae Council meeting which has just been held at the college in Northampton, Mass. Mrs. Kenneth Holland, one of the two representatives of the Washington Smith College Club, on the council, will give the main report, while further details of the meeting and of college activities will be given by Mrs. F. J. Libby, president of the club and its other representative at the meeting. Other speakers will be Mrs. W. Chapin Huntington, one of the trustees of the college and former president of the Alumnae Association, and Mrs. H. G. Nichols.

Arkansas Society To Dance Tonight

Tonight, from 9 until 1 o'clock, the Arkansas Society will give a reception at Hotel 2400 in honor of the Congressional delegation.

Dr. Erwin H. Shinn, president of the society, will head the receiving line. Among those receiving with him will be Senator Hattie Caraway, Senator John E. Miller and Representatives E. C. Gathings, Wilbur D. Mills, Clyde P. Ellis, David T. Terry, William F. Norrell and Wade Kitchens.

Officers of the society who will be in line include B. A. Dollarhide, vice president; Ed R. Hicks, Mrs. Sam Wassell, Miss Marcia Coltart and Thomas M. Tatum.

Others will be Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Miles, Miss Stella Pickett Hardy, Mr. Boland Turner and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Taylor.

Mrs. Florence Kerr Back From New York

Mrs. Florence S. Kerr, assistant administrator of the Works Progress Administration, will return today from New York where she entertained a group of friends at the opening performance on Wednesday of the Federal Theater project's swing version of "The Mikado."

Mrs. Roosevelt, Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins and WPA administrator, Col. Francis Harrington, also attended the opening.

Dr. Fritz Marti, of the University of Maryland, guest speaker at the meeting of the Twentieth Century Club yesterday, congratulates Mrs. R. Thomas West on the decision of the club to sponsor the project she suggested for the observance of its fiftieth anniversary. In the center is Mrs. Edward G. Montgomery, club president. Mrs. West described the need of crippled children in Gallinger Hospital for educational therapy and equipment, for this will be supplied within the next two years by the club.

Benefit Show Plans Mapped

Final arrangements for the Spring Fashion Show to be given tomorrow at the Hotel Roosevelt for the benefit of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church were made at a tea given for the committee by Miss Anna Wolcott Archibald.

Mrs. James H. Hughes, wife of Senator Hughes of Delaware will pour tea. The committee for serving is headed by Mrs. H. L. Engelbright, wife of Representative Engelbright of California. She will be assisted by Senora de Fuentes, wife of the Mexican Counselor, Senora de Campbell, wife of the Commercial Counselor of Chile, and Senora de Bayle. Ushers and other tea aides include Senorita Aria Moll, Miss Anita Cajigas, Senorita Adriena Mercado, Senorita Eleanor Campbell, and Miss Lilian Swindlehurst.

The gowns will be announced by Mrs. Newton Brewer and those who will model include Senorita Erma Castillo Najera, daughter of the Mexican Ambassador, Senora de Crespo, wife of the Ecuador Secretary, Mrs. Ryland Bryant, Mrs. Marion Davies, Miss Patricia Brewer, Miss Eileen Mercado, Miss Anna Wolcott Archibald, Mrs. Simpson State Justice, Miss Gay Hess, Miss Ludmilla Floss, Miss Patricia Wilder and Miss Beverly Shah.

Plans for D. A. R. Convention Here March 12 Nearly Complete

Lillian Chenoweth Is Chairman of Group On Arrangements; Mrs. Haig, Mrs. Houghton, Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Obelholser Assist

Plans are nearing completion for the annual state conference of the District Daughters of the American Revolution, to be held this year from March 12 to 14, at Memorial Continental Hall.

Miss Lillian Chenoweth, state regent, is general chairman of arrangements and will preside at the meetings. She is being assisted by Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, vice president general; Mrs. Harry C. Obelholser, state vice regent; Mrs. Alexander H. Bell, state chaplain; Mrs. Arthur C. Houghton, state corresponding secretary, and the following chairmen of state committees: Mrs. Barton Stone Embry, entertainment; Mrs. Lois Marshall Hicks, music, and Mrs. Elmer Curry, printing.

The conference will open at 3:00 p. m. Sunday, March 12, with services for members of the organization who have died during the past year. Mrs. Bell will be in charge.

On Monday morning the conference will open at 9:30, when reports of officers and chairmen of state committees will be given.

A luncheon will be held at the American Association of University Women's Club where the Regents Club will entertain the state regent and her advisory board and distinguished visitors.

The reports of State chairmen will continue during the afternoon, including that of the resolutions committee, of which Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig is chairman.

Monday night will be Regents Night and will open with a band concert by the United States Marine Band at 7:00. At 7:30 the regents of the 60 chapters in the District, each carrying a huge bouquet, will form a procession to the stage, which will have a background of all the flags of the chapters. The hall will be decorated with flowers. The regents will read the report of the work done by their chapters since the last conference, with music being played between the various reports.

Tuesday morning at 9:30 the Junior American Citizens of the District will present a dramatic sketch, and Mrs. John M. Beavers, State chairman of the special committee on by-laws, will report.

The conference will recess at noon and will go to the National Cathedral to witness the presentation of a flag to hang beside the plaque to the cathedral by the District Daughters last year bearing the names of the signers of the Constitution.

Tuesday afternoon good citizenship medals will be presented, and Mr. Lee R. Pennington, jr., of the Department of Justice, will speak. The Girl Home Makers Clubs will present their glee club, under the direction of Miss Maxwell Galloway.

Tuesday night the conference will close with a banquet at the Mayflower Hotel, for which Mrs. Barton Stone Embry is chairman of arrangements.

Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

DEMOCRACY demands that woman, as an equal human being, be given an equal place in human affairs, Susan B. Anthony told members of the 75th Club whom she addressed at their first luncheon of the season yesterday at the Broadmoor. Comparing democracy with fascism, she pointed out that in the totalitarian state women in the professions were being subordinated to minor, badly paid positions or ousted entirely.

Mrs. William T. Byrne, president of the club, presided, and Mrs. John R. Murdock, a past president, made an introductory talk. A corsage was presented to Mrs. Allen Ellender, retiring president.

Marjorie Brett, soloist of the a cappella choir, who sang for the 76th Club Wednesday, sang for the 75th yesterday.

Officers with Mrs. Byrne at the head table were Mrs. Lister Hill and Mrs. Lawrence Arnold, vice presidents; Mrs. Lyle H. Boren, treasurer, and Mrs. Edward Reese, secretary.

Club members filled out questionnaires as to their interests in study, sports and their own talents with which they can contribute to the year's programs.

The Sweet Briar Alumnae of Washington will have a bridge party tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 at the home of Mrs. M. D. Nohowell, 2101 Connecticut avenue.

MISS ANNA BADEN, who is 98 years old and a life member of the Petworth Woman's Club, was present at its meeting in the Petworth Baptist Church yesterday afternoon and recited a poem on "Youth and Age."

Mrs. Adelaide Hibbard, who for 11 years was in stock with the National Players, was the speaker, talking on the theater, and Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig presented a group of solos, accompanied by Mrs. D. L. Selke.

Mrs. Timothy Tincher, chairman of the silver jubilee, to be celebrated in June, passed around a coin bank in the form of a miniature clubhouse, significant of the anniversary project of the club. Incidentally, since the meetings have been changed from evening to afternoon, there has been a record average attendance.

Mrs. Oscar Nelson, the president, was in charge of the business meeting. Mrs. Otto Hammerlund, of the program, and Mrs. Edward B. Johnson, literature section chairman, of the luncheon.

LETTERS of Dorothea Lynde Dix (1794-1887(pioneer in work among the insane and in prisons, will be presented to the World Center for Women's Archives by Mrs. Emil Hurja tomorrow at the luncheon being sponsored by the Washington Branch, at the Mayflower. Mrs. Hurja has charge of the program for the affair, at which several hundred will be present.

Kate Trenholme Abrams, for years in Geneva with the League of Nations and head of the League office here, is sending records of her work; Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins will give material as will Representative Caroline O'Day, of her peace and child welfare activities. Through Mrs. Louis Ottenberg, the D. C. Voteless League of Women Voters, will present a copy of its report on the relief survey its members made last year. Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, chairman of the Washington Branch of the World Center, will present the will of an ancestress made in 1800. Brief talks on the value of the archives will be made by Dorothy Detzer and Fola La Follette.

Mrs. Roosevelt will be the guest of honor and Mary Beard and Inez Haynes Irwin, other guest speakers.

Mrs. Hoskinson Re-elected Head Of Methodist Home Board

President's Associate Lady Managers All Renamed; Mortgage of Institution, In Fiftieth Year, to Be Burned Sunday

Mrs. Harry Hoskinson, who has served as president of the board of lady managers of the Methodist Home for the last ten years, was re-elected yesterday with all officers who have served with her in the past year. Despite the fact of her mother's death only a few days ago, Mrs. Hoskinson was present yesterday to conduct the meeting, which was held at the home.

Other officers are: Honorary president, Mrs. Fred S. Cawson, who is the only active charter member; vice president at large, Mrs. W. A. Haggerty; first vice president, Mrs. J. Frank Campbell; second vice president, Mrs. W. E. Waite; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Howell Bartle; assistant corresponding secretary, Mrs. H. L. Buell; recording secretary, Miss Bertha Gray; assistant recording secretary, Mrs. C. Stanley Titus, jr.; treasurer, Mrs. Dudley F. Holtman, and assistant treasurer, Mrs. Edward M. Hall.

Endowment Fund Growing Steadily

Hoskinson, who is president of the board of trustees of the home, reported that the endowment fund established a few years ago now amounts to $106,208.63. This is to be increased until the interest on it is sufficient for the maintenance of the home. It now provides for it only in part.

The meeting yesterday marked the fiftieth anniversary year of the home, which the board of lady managers has celebrated under Mrs. Haskinson's leadership by paying off the mortgage. This will be formally burned on Sunday night at a mass meeting at the Foundry Methodist Church.

Mrs. Harry Underwod, chairman of the fiftieth anniversary celebration, announced a banquet to be held at the Willard Hotel April 11, completing the observance. Bishop Ivan Lee Holt, of Texas, will be the speaker.

In addition to the business meeting, there was a program including devotionals, led by Dr. W. H. Burgan, pastor of the Hamline Methodist Church; a memorial tribute to members of the board who died during the year, given by Dr. William Haggerty; a short talk by Dr. Ellis Williams, district superintendent, in which he congratulated the women on their work, and a talk by Jacob S. Payton, editor of "The Methodist Press," guest speaker.

Miss Knoke Is Heard on Program

Music included vocal solos by Miss Bertha Knoke, of Plainfield, N. J., daughter of Mrs. Lucretia Knoke, superintendent of the home, and by Mrs. Harriet Harding Guthrie. Miss Knoke came from Plainfield especially to contribute to the program.

A buffet luncheon was served. Mrs. Frederick Untied was chairman of the luncheon, assisted by Mrs. John A. Smith, Mrs. J. Stanley Long, Mrs. H. W. Barber, Mrs. Samuel W. McIntosh, Mrs. M. W. Hendry.

Plan Tea on Sunday

Col. and Mrs. John W. Joyes have issued invitations for a tea on Sunday afternoon, March 5, in honor of their daughter, Mrs. Mason F. Stober, who is visiting them for ten days from her home at West Point, N. Y.

Assisting during the afternoon will be Miss Cora McIver, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. George W. McIver, and Miss Patricia Joyes.

Orlando, Fla., March 2.

Now that Tony (Bring on dat bum Louis) Galento has buffooned his way into a title fight, how about a great big hand for little Joe Jacobs, who promoted his clown into a shot at the championship? When Mike Jacobs announced the other day that Galento had been signed for a bout with Louis, he was announcing the completion of Joe Jacobs' masterpiece.

POVICH.

Joe Jacobs took a fat, washed-up fighter under his wing two years ago and brazenly proceeded to make a fistic figure out of him. Galento had only one recommendation when he came under the Joe Jacobs influence. He could hit and that summed up his talents. Jack Dempsey was intrigued by Galento's hitting power but even the sponsorship and backing of Dempsey could not cloud the fact that Galento, bluntly, was a ham.

That fact, however, did not seem to discourage Joe Jacobs who was lately without a fighter to manage, Max Schmeling having fired him as manager and hired him merely as his front man in America. Jacobs fell title to Galento because Dempsey didn't want him any more, and nobody else would have him, and then ensued one of the most uproarious build-ups in an industry that is famed for them.

Shades of Primo Carnera

Primo Carnera's was supposed to have been the ultimate in build-ups. The Vast Venetian who lost his French manager when American racketeers muscled in, was steered past a brigade of stumblebums with such care that there was an actual suspicion that he could fight after all. Particularly when one of his ponderous lefts killed poor Ernie Schaaf in a Garden ring. But there never has been any suspicion that Tony Galento could fight.

Basically, Galento was promoted in the same manner that Carnera was built up. Jacobs engaged as his opponents some of the outstanding bums of the heavyweight division. But he used great care. Chiefly, he picked out the bums that Joe Louis had knocked out, and then in almost each case he superintended the business of their knockouts by Galento in even quicker time. If Louis disposes of such as Harry Thomas in three rounds, then Jacobs would make certain that his man Galento would knock him out in one, two at the most.

As a result Galento blossomed as a connoisseur of plain and fancy diving. He was close at hand when his opponents were doing jackknives, swans, one-and-a-halfs. For him they performed everything but the Immerman roll. Through it all there never has been any suspicion that Galento could fight, merely that he could hit if a target were rooted to a spot.

Tony the Perfect Foil

But actually, Galento clowned himself into this title fight with Louis under the shrewd management of Joe Jacobs who knows a clown when he sees Galento. Starting with the proclamation by Galento that the only person in the world he was afraid of was his wife, Jacobs steered Two-Ton Tony through a series of publicity build-ups.

When the New York Boxing Commission publicly frowned on pictures of Galento as a Tavern keeper guzzling his beer out of the vat, Jacobs had an answer. He arranged for pictures of Tony in fighting togs sucking a lollypop and drinking milk through a straw. He had a great foil. Tony lent himself to such pictures, eagerly. It made business for his tavern, at least, though at the time there was no suspicion that it would all result in a title fight.

He got a couple of nice breaks in a publicity way last year, too, when Gene Tunney sounded off that Gargantua, the giant anthropoid in the Ringling Circus, actually wasn't so tough; that a good heavyweight would outsmart the ape and beat him. Galento immediately issued a challenge and told what he'd do to "dat bum de ape."

And what appeared to be something of a set-back a bit later worked out in his favor, too, when his bout with John Henry Lewis was called off on account Tony came down with double pneumonia a week before the fight. After three weeks in an oxygen tent, he was able to announce dat (he's got me talking dat way) he could "lick dat bum Pneumonia easy." What he wanted was "dat bum Louis." Galento stories by that time were in demand, and they cluttered the national news services. In the cities and in the provinces, Galento came to be something of a figure, thanks to his own native ability to clown, and Joe Jacobs' unblushing promotion of it.

Clown May Play Tragedy

It has worked out very nicely, too, for Mr. Herman Taylor, of Philadelphia, who owns a piece of Galento. Before Promoter Mike Jacobs could sign Galento for a Louis fight, he had to make his peace with Mr. Taylor, the Philadelphia promoter, who had Tony under a five-year contract, meaning that Galento could fight only in bouts promoted by Taylor or in bouts to which Taylor gave his consent. Taylor certainly did not give his consent to the Louis fight until Mike Jacobs made it worth his while. A Louis-Galento fight ought to draw, too. Tony has captured the imagination of fight fans and the fact that he can't fight will be no deterrent to the great receipts. The surest way to bring out the customers is to broadcast that somebody is apt to be killed, and Gene Tunney has already unwittingly contributed that promotorial windfall.

Tunney, in Washington this winter, commented briefly on the proposed Louis-Galento match. He said: "That's one fight I would not care to see. Somebody might be killed, and, of course, it wouldn't be Louis."

Joe Jacobs' masterpiece, as I was saying, has already been completed. He promoted Galento into a Louis fight. But Galento's chief d'ouevre is not yet finished. Not until he clowns his way past Joe Louis. That may be the fight in which the proverbial clown may get his wish, and actually play tragedy.

On the Line
With Considine

New York, March 2.—The strangest and perhaps most sinister trip ever taken by an athlete came to an end last midnight when Max Schmeling stepped on German soil—the S. S. Deutschland—and sailed back to his homeland. No clue fell from his tight lips as to why he came here. After the well confirmed reports abroad that he was in custody. No amount of reportorial priming, before he left, could coax any hint from him. Only his curiously thoughtful face betrayed his secret worry.

CONSIDINE

"I'm coming back in May," he told us at his hotel, as he packed some of the presents he said people had given him during his stay here. "I'm going to have a couple of fights in Germany, then come back here to see Baer fight Nova, and Louis fight that fellow Galento. He smiled at Galento's name. He thinks there is something funny about Tony.

He didn't know just whom he'd fight in Germany.

"That's up to the promoters. Maybe Neusel . . . You never know. Walter's the heavyweight champion of Germany now. But, as I say, that's up to the promoters. We've got some pretty good ones there now. Like Englert in Frankfort, Herman in Koenigsburg and Schumacher in Berlin."

Hasn't Much to Do

We asked him what happened to Walter Rothenberg, who for years was called the Tex Rickard of Germany and who had offered Braddock $350,000 guarantee to fight Schmeling for the title in Berlin.

"He . . . ah . . . He doesn't have much to do any more," Max said.

Schmeling and his trainer and inseparable friend, Max Machon, said they were very disappointed over Mike Jacobs' announcement that Louis had been matched against Galento. "We had it from Jacobs himself," the fighter said, "that I would get the winner of Nova and Baer and that the winner would meet Louis. Now, I seem to be out. I don't understand. . . ."

But he had a good time here. "The best of all the 13 trips I made. I was always off somewhere in the country, training. But this time we went many places. We saw the homes of our friends and the theaters and clubs."

Billy Conn's the best young fighter he saw while he was here. "He's a wonderful boxer," the fighter said. "I would like to have seen Nova fight too. He must be very good from what I hear. No . . . I didn't mind missing Galento."

He didn't feel privileged to ask for another Louis fight, ". . . Even though we're now only even, one knockout to each man. I wanted to make sure first. I don't think it hurt me to be knocked out by Louis. I've taken a good rest, not like this Nathan Mann, who came back too soon and got knocked out again.

"German" Millionaire

"I'll know for sure after my two fights in Germany whether I'm good enough to fight Louis again. If I have any doubt in my mind I'll quit. I don't have to fight any more, if I don't want to."

Schmeling, so far as German marks are concerned, is a millionaire. He has a large farm that supports him and gives him a hunting preserve; a home in Berlin, and collects the rents on a city block of small homes in Hamburg.

The only explanation that occurs to Max as to why he has been superseded in Mike Jacobs' affections by Galento (who is a stablemate) is that Jacobs wants to get Tony out of his hair.

"Maybe he figures he won't hear about him any more after he fights Louis. Of course Louis will win. Tony's only chance is to land a quick punch. If he does he'll knock Louis down. But the punch has to land. Otherwise, Louis will murder him, because Tony is wide open when he hits. Anybody Louis hits goes down," he said, soberly and thoughtfully rubbing his hand over his blue-black chin.

Snead, Picard Tie for First At St. Pete

SAM SNEAD

W. Va. Pro Makes Strong Finish in Florida Tourney

By the Associated Press.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 2.—Red Hot Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., and Samuel Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., wound up the 54 hole St. Petersburg Open Golf Tournament today in a deadlock at 207, nine strokes under par.

The Candy Kid, bidding for his third straight tournament win, and Slammin' Sam, who led the 1938 money winners, will meet in 18 holes of medal play tomorrow to determine who takes the $700 top money and who gets the $450 second prize. They will split the "gate" 50-50.

By finishing in a tie, Picard and Snead kept up a tournament tradition, the preceding three meets also having called for playoffs.

Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va., pro, who was in last year's playoff against Johnny Revolta, of Evanston, Ill., was contender all the way again this year and finished with a 208 that gave him third money, $350.

Picard and Snead each put together three sub-par rounds. The former had successive cards of 67, 69 and 71, and the latter, 70, 69 and 68.

A second round of 75, three over regulation figures, cost Leo Walper, Washington, D. C., pro, a place higher among the money winners. After an initial 70, two under par, Walper slipped to his 75 and then came back in 70 for a 215 total and $90.

Cards and purses of the leaders:

Sam Snead, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., 70, 69, 68—207.
Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa., 67, 69, 71—207.
Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va., 70, 68, 70—208; $350.
Byron Nelson, Reading, Pa., 70, 71, 70—211; $250.
Ben Hogan, White Plains, N. Y., 69, 71, 71—211; $250.
Jim Turnesa, St. Petersburg, 70, 72, 70—212; $170.
Willie Goggin, San Bruno, Calif., 70, 74, 68—212; $170.
Johnny Perrelli, Lake Tahoe, Calif., 70, 72, 71—213; $140.
Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill., 72, 73, 69—214; $120.
E. J. Harrison, Oak Park, Ill., 71, 72, 72—215; $90.
Lee Walper, Washington, D. C., 70, 75, 70—215; $90.
Clayton Heafner, Greensboro, N. C., 72, 71, 72—215; $90.
Bob Shave, St. Petersburg, 70, 73, 73—216; $26.
Lloyd Mangrum, Los Angeles, Calif., 72, 71, 73—216; $26.
Mike Farco, Buffalo, N. Y., 70, 72, 74—216; $26.
Dick Metz, Chicago, 70, 72, 74—216; $26.
Billie Burke, Belleair, Fla., 66, 77, 73—216; $26.

Cassaquel Impressive In His Debut

Nats' Newest Mound Importation Shows Great Stuff; Rick Likes His Chances

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 2.—They unveiled Senor Alejandro Cassaquel at Tinker Field today and at the end of his first pitching performance on American soil the atmosphere in the Nats' camp was thic with wonder.

Is Cassaquel another pitching prospect in a camp that already seems to have more than its share?

The Venezuelan, a big, bony, dark-visaged fellow certainly created a profound impression on Manager Bucky Harris. Clark Griffith, the coaches and the hundred-odd winter tourists who watched intently at his debut.

Pitching to Catcher Jake Early, Cassaquel showed them a fast ball that plunked into the mitt with a whack that resounded the length of the field. He was cool and deliberate and he acted as if he knew how to pitch. He wasn't called upon to throw his curve, but he threw his fast one overhand and sidearm to the undisguised satisfaction of his critics.

Rodriguez Tabbed Him

He came here chaperoned by Joe Rodriguez, a Cuban who years ago played first base for Rochester and led the International League in hitting until Joe Engel beaned him with a fast ball. Rodriguez, who also had a try-out with the Giants, delivered Cassaquel to the Nats with the understanding that he would be remunerated if the Venezuelan blossomed as a regular pitcher.

He learned to play baseball in Central America where the game was introduced by Cubans, and last year he was signed to pitch in the Havana winter league. He led that league in pitching and so impressed Rodriguez that the latter sent in a hurry call for Joe Cambria, the Nats' scout, who was beating the bushes in Cuba two months ago.

How old is he? That is a question that defies answer equally as much as his ability to pitch. He told one newspaper man he was 24. Ten minutes later he advised another he was 26. This he did through an interpreter, for he speaks no English.

Has Jump on Others.

But there is evidence also that his passport to America shows him to be 29. He looks 40. Bucky Harris was saying today that "if this guy is 24, so am I." And Harris frankly admits to being 42. The Nats' manager, however, is quite uninterested in the age of the Venezuelan if he can justify his first impression.

Of course the fellow had a head start on the other pitchers here. He had been pitching all winter and his arm was in shape. As Catcher Rick Ferrell commented: "Every pitcher looks fast at this stage of the proceedings. We can tell better how fast they are in June and July, when we can draw comparisons."

But that Cassaquel will be tabbed by the Nats is certain. With his pitching staff so woefully weak, Bucky Harris is overlooking no bets. If the Venezuelan can pitch Harris wants to know it. He'll be brought along gradually and will get his chance in the spring exhibition games.

"His curve ball is better than his fast one," said Rodriguez as the Army and Navy Grid Classic Stays in East

Service Teams Will Meet in Philadelphia; Middie Games Listed

Annapolis, Md., March 2.—The Army-Navy football classic will remain at the Municipal Stadium, at Philadelphia, it was disclosed today with the official announcement of the Middies' 1939 football schedule which includes two new opponents. In making public the Tars' line-up of games, Commander Ward Davis, graduate manager of athletics at the academy, served definite notice that political pressure that had been brought to bear to have the game played in Chicago had failed. Illinois had made a bold effort to obtain the service classic because the rival captains, Allan Bergner, of

Jimmy DeShong's Electric Shave Costs Him $25

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orlando, Fla., March 2.—Pitcher Jimmy DeShong, of the Nats, shaved today at great cost to himself. While he was removing the last stubborn whiskers of his day-old beard in the bathroom of his hotel, a sneak thief invaded his bedroom and relieved DeShong of $25 in cash reposing on a bureau.

Tonight DeShong swore off electric razors. He blames the noise of the razor for the fact that the thief was able to make his (or her) entrance unnoticed and get away with the swag.

Sabin Advances To Indoor Finals

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 2.—If you've been wondering why Wayne Sabin hasn't lost a tennis match since the first of the year, you should have been at the Seventh Regiment Armory today, watching him dust off Jack Tidball, of Los Angeles, 6—3, 6—1, 8—6, to reach the final round of men's singles in the national indoor championships. It was a lesson in how tennis should be played.

Like the king, top-seeded Sabin could do no wrong. When the Portland, (Ore.), Davic Cup hopeful moved into volleying position, Tidball might as well have tried to bat balls through a brick wall.

When Wayne chose to stay on the baseline and let Tidball try his luck at the net, one of three things happened; the Californian was passed by whizzing forehand and backhand drives, or he was caught off balance as he was coming up by soft shots that just cleared the net, or he was sent tearing back for the baseline by beautifully placed lobs.

Pencheff Pins Bibber McCoy In Mat Feature

Australian Champ Takes 34½ Minutes To Win at Arena

Australian Champion George Pencheff ran his mat victories to five in a row last night in the feature bout at Turner's Arena, pinning Bibber McCoy in 34½ minutes with his kangaroo kick and a body press.

The bout was clean for 33 minutes until a spectator yelled "what's the matter with McCoy" and the latter promptly assumed his villanous role and pounded Pencheff from head to foot. Pencheff replied with the kangaroo kick and then used the body press as the referee counted the former Holy Cross gridder out.

Baba Zaharias won a return engagement from Rube Wright in 26 minutes with a body press after 26 minutes, while Jack Hader, local matman, used a Japanese arm lock in trimming Housepainter Hogan in 16 minutes.

Red Ryan took the same time, 16 minutes, to pull the Zaharias family percentage down to .500 for the night, borrowing Pencheff's kangaroo kick for the occasion to beat Cliff, brother to Babe Zaharias.

Paddy Mack and Pat Corrigan battled to a 30-minute "Irish" draw in the weekly stalemate. Over 1,000 witnessed the program.

Wake Forest Upset, 30-28, By Clemson

North Carolina State And Davidson Victors In Quarterfinals of Conference Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Raleigh, N. C., March 2.—Maryland's Old Liners, second seeded team in the 1939 Southern Conference Basketball Tourney, pushed into the semi-finals with a 47 to 32 victory this afternoon over Richmond's Spiders.

Clemson scored the first major upset of the tournament by defeating the odds-on-favorites Wake Forest Deacons, 30-28, to join Maryland, Davidson, and North Carolina State in the semifinals. Davidson defeated Washington and Lee, 43-32, in the second afternoon game, and North Carolina State eliminated the fourth seeded Citadel Cadets, 40-38, in the first night game. Maryland is the only seeded team to advance.

Tomorrow night Maryland will meet North Carolina State and Clemson clashes with Davidson in the semifinals.

Dick Humbert was Richmond's best, though his 10 points lacked 1 of equaling Arthur Jones' total of 11. Jones was especially hot on long shots.

Johnson, playing superbly scored 18 points. Time after time he broke into Richmond's passing attack, scurried down the floor dribbling, and shot the ball through the hoop.

Terps Grab Lead

Maryland's favorite method of attack—to have one man close to his own basket for a long pass if the ball could be taken from the Spiders—resulted in a number of the Old Liner tallies.

Maryland took a 5 point lead to start the game, with Johnson getting the first basket. Humbert tallied first for Richmond, after seven minutes. The Spiders put on pressure and three minutes later had doubled the score on the Old Liners, at 10 to 5.

Johnson and Knepley cut loose, then, and when Dewitt later bagged two from the floor in a minute, the Old Liners were ahead again and held it at the half, 18 to 15.

The Marylanders, through a couple of baskets each by Johnson and Dewitt, stretched their margin to 26 to 15 with five minutes gone of the second half. Humbert got a 2-pointer for Richmond, then Johnson and Dewitt ran the count to 34 to 17. Jones got 7 points in a little over two minutes in a Richmond rally, but the Old Liners steadied and went on to win handily.

Davidson Wins, 43-32

Dewitt tallied 15 of the Maryland points.

Tomorrow night Maryland plays the winner of tonight's game between North Carolina State and The Citadel.

The Davidson Wildcats upset Washington and Lee, 43 to 32, this afternoon in the first game of the second round.

The Generals had been seeded third, with Davidson unseeded, but Ned Iverson's accurate shooting and good floor work, and Johnny Tice's extremely tight guarding of Dick Pinck, Washington and Lee star, told the story. Tice, only 5 feet 5 in height, worried Pinck just too much. Davidson tomorrow will meet the winner of tonight's game between Wake Forest and Clemson.

Drudgery, Meade Up, Easy Winner in Hialeah Feature

Guest's Star Winner by 3 Lengths

Favorite, at $5.70, Always Ahead, Beats Gay Balko With Donna Leona Third

By the Associated Press.

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 2.—Winston Guest, well-known in Long Island polo circles, today saw his silks carried for the first time and enjoyed the unusual thrill of winning his initial race. Drudgery, recently purchased from Mrs. Dodge Sloane's Brookmeade Stable for a reported price of $6,500, flaunted the brand-new chocolate and primrose yellow colors and led from end to end of the Grade "C" sixth event, a 6-furlong test for veteran sprinters.

Drudgery, one of the most consistent horses in training, gave Don Meade a double while scoring with three lengths to spare over P. Andolino's Gay Balko. Snow White Stable's tiny filly, Donna Leona, lost the place by two lengths. Drudgery, a slight favorite over Gay Balko at $5.70 for $2, reported in 1:11 flat.

It was Drudgery's second straight score. In his other four starts here, the Brooms gelding finished second. He beat Gay Balko a nose in their recent meeting, but today, despite a shift of 6 pounds in Gay Balko's favor, Drudgery was easily superior.

There was little to the running. Meade hustled the favorite right to the front and his mount never faltered under his 118 pounds. Gay Balko always supplied what contention there was, while Donna Leona maintained third position virtually from the start while failing to menace the top pair.

The talent received a setback right off the reel when Brilliant Gold, fancied to beat six other 2-year-old platers, finished fourth in the 3 furlong test. The colt failed to keep a straight course after taking a narrow early lead and wilted right out of the picture.

Real Flyer, which closed a lot of ground in her first start, was a driving winner of the race. Paying $14.80 for $2, the filly kept well up from the start and drove home by a length.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1939.

WEATHER, CLEAR. TRACK, FAST.

FIRST RACE—Three furlongs (nursery course). Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate for all but Swift Singer. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:00. Off 2:02½. Winner, D. B. Midkiff's br. f. (2), by Playtime—Real Pardner. Trained by R. A. Kindred. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:34 4-5.

GAY FRANK	(Hanford)	109	7	6	6³	6¹²	33.90
SWIFT SINGER	(DeCamillis)	108	6	7	7	7	20.50

Two-dollar mutuels paid—REAL FLYER, $14.80, $8.10, $4.90; HI GOLD, $4.10, $3.10; BLUE COVERT, $4.50.

REAL FLYER, hustled into contention in the run out of the chute, drew clear at the furlong pole and maintained her lead gamely to the end. HI GOLD moved up courageously after going the opening quarter mile, but Quintero was of little aid to him in the final drive. BLUE COVERT, vigorously ridden, had no excuses. BRILLIANT GOLD, quickest to begin, began to swerve out shortly after the break and continued to run a zigzag course.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:32. Off 2:33½. Winner, J. P. Rogers' gr. g. (7), by Westy Hogan—Candy Queen. Trained by G. L. Arvin. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:22 4-5, 0:46, 1:12 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuel paid—CANDY PRINCE, $4.70, $3.10, $2.80; HUNTING RIDGE, $9.40, $5.80; SORTIE'S SON, $6.00.

CANDY PRINCE, on the inside for a steady pace the opening three furlongs, swung to the outside of the leader entering the stretch, took a short lead, responded with determination when the final issue came and outlasted HUNTING RIDGE. The latter, well up, also saved ground early, was taken to the outside in the last quarter mile and made a game effort, but could not get up. SORTIE'S SON, under vigorously pressure throughout, finished with a belated rush on the inside and would have won with a few more strides to go. DINNER JACKET made a bid turning into the stretch, but hung as if a trifle short in the final drive.

Daily Double, Real Flyer and Candy Prince, Paid $50.60.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:00. Off 3:03. Winner, Mrs. J. Fox's br. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WHISPER, $11.10, $5.10, $3.70; MR. BUDDY, $40.60, $17.30; TUTTICURIO, $5.00.

WHISPER, moving forward on the extreme outside, closed with determination through the stretch under vigorous urging and outlasted MR. BUDDY in the final drive. MR. BUDDY, going in near pursuit of the leader early, took command entering the stretch, but hung in the last strides. TUTTICURIO, always well up, made a game effort, but couldn't reach the leaders. BELLUM, away slowly, closed a big gap and was going fastest of all at the end. ELI YALE, hustled to the front, showed the most early foot, but weakened badly in the final furlong.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:30. Off 3:32. Winner, J. La Belle's b. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SEPTIME, $8.30, $5.40, $3.80; BRAIN TRUST, $5.90, $4.30; PANDONNA, $6.30.

SEPTIME followed the pace closely under light restraint until well straightened into the stretch, where she closed courageously under energetic pressure and got up in the final strides. BRAIN TRUST broke fast, set a swift pace while saving ground, but faltered when challenged. PANDONNA, always well up, was unable to better her position in the final drive. NOTICE ME, outrun in the first half mile, closed strongly through the stretch, but never threatened the leaders. ESCOHIGH had no excuses and ran a very dull race.

FIFTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:59. Off 4:00½. Winner, River Divide Farm's ch. c. (3), by General Lee—Nutting. Trained by R. T. Shepp. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:22 4-5, 0:46, 1:12 1-5, 1:18 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HANDIBOY, $14.60, $6.60, $4.70; SUGARAGE, $6.40, $5.00; RANGE DUST, $4.40.

HANDIBOY, slow to find his stride, began to improve his position on the outside midway and around the turn and continuing with determination under punishment, outstayed his opposition in the final drive. SUGARAGE, pinched back leaving the backstretch, saved ground rounding the turn, was taken to the outside in the last quarter mile, finished gamely through the stretch and was going strongest of all. RANGE DUST, rushed to the front, raced DONNA LOPEZ and SPEEDY BOOGER into defeat and drew out on the backstretch, but faltered right at the end. SPEEDY BOOGER, prominent contender until the way on the outside, bore in badly at the furlong pole when placed to punishment.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Hollywood Beach Hotel, Grade C. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:29. Off 4:33½. Winner, Winston Guest's br. g. (5), by Brooms—Dark Phantom. Trained by W. E. Martin. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:46, 1:11.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DRUDGERY, $5.70, $3.10, $2.60; GAY BALKO, $3.10, $2.50; DONNA LEONA, $3.00.

DRUDGERY, the fast, set a rapid pace while saving ground and being reserved in front, opened up a winning lead after entering the stretch to win as his rider wished. GAY BALKO, in closest pursuit of the leader all the way, made a game effort on the stretch turn, but faltered in the stretch run. DONNA LEONA, on the inside and saving ground early, swung around the leaders turning into the stretch and finished gamely, but never seriously threatened the leaders. LITTLE MIRACLE broke well and went well up until midway around the turn, where she dropped back, but came again under severe pressure.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won cleverly; place driving. Went to post 5:00. Off 5:02½. Winner, A. Sprow's b. f. (3), by Whichone—Beaming Over. Trained by K. Ramsey. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:48 2-5, 1:14 1-5, 1:39 2-5, 2:07.

WOULD DARE	(Anderson)	118	9	10	10	10	10	10	10	7.05

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BOW AND ARROW, $11.20, $5.90, $4.00; MISTRALKIN, $4.80, $3.20; MARDROMEL, $4.30.

BOW AND ARROW, under slight restraint until leaving the backstretch, moved up gradually when placed to pressure, shook off the leaders when straightened into the stretch and held away the remainder of the trip. MISTRALKIN, under steadying restraint and prominent in the early running, dropped back on the stretch turn, but then came again, but could not reach the winner. MARDROMEL bettered her position steadily in the last half mile and held BOLD GENERAL safe. The latter had no excuses.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 5:30. Off 5:33. Winner, W. CRIUS gained steadily while circling the field after entering the backstretch, disposed of FIGHT BACK after entering the stretch and won mildly urged. FIGHT BACK showed good speed from the start and was no match for the winner, but held the others safe. EXTENDED, outrun early, responded gamely to punishment and outlasted JOLLY JACK. The latter, a forward contender all the way, faltered in the final drive.

No Privacy for Mere Man

Scene: a public bar. First gent is seated on a stool at one end. Second and third gents are standing together about the center of the bar. At the other end a lady is perched on a stool.

RUNYON

First gent (suddenly raising his voice in song)—Dry Yer Hyes en Doan feel blue.

The bartender—Did you say something, sir?

First gent (indignantly)—Whattah you mean did I say something? I'm singing.

The bartender—Oh, I beg your pardon.

First gent (raising voice again)—Ever' cloud muzz havvah silver lining.

(Second and third gents have gradually eased themselves along the bar toward the first gent, nudging their drinks down the mahogany with them.)

First gent (raising voice to a wail)—Er elze I shall be—

Second gent—Sure. Lezz sing som'pin' else. Lezz sing som'pin' we all know. Lezz sing Mole Kentuckah Home.

First gent (interested) — You from Kentuckah?

Second gent—No I'm from Astorie but I like to sing Mole Kentuckah Home.

Second gent (insistently)—Lezz sing Mole Kentuckah Home.

First gent—All right. You lead.

Second gent (clearing throat, and very sad)—Oh, thuh moon shines brigh'—

First and third gents (coming in together)—On Mole Kentuckah home! (All together—slow and sad)—It's summer'n' the darkeez are gray.

The lad, (who has quietly approached the group, suddenly snapping her fingers and swinging it a little—Oh, yes, those darkies are guh-hay!

The lady—It's me. I'm singing, too. I sing contralto.

First gent (outraged)—There you are, now! A man can't go somewhere to sing a little without dames horning in. No matter where you go there's dames. They oughta keep them outta places.

First gent (grouchily)—We don't need no help.

Third gent (unaware of any interruption and still very, very sad)—Weep no more, my ladies.

First gent (totally disgusted)—Thazz the trouble with this country. No privacy.

(He moves sulkily to the other end of the bar leaving the second and third gents still singing, but somewhat lamely.)

The bartender—Lady and gentleman, please can that stuff. This ent Carnegie Hall.

The bartender—No, I don't.

The lady (frostily)—Oh, is that so?

Third gent (angrily)—I know your kind. You're one of those guys that don't want nobody to have fun.

The bartender (gloomily)—No chance.

Second gent—Well, I guess I'll go home.

Third gent—Me, too, but I know that guy's kind. He's a Communist.

The lady—I'm waiting to meet my husband and when I tell him you criticized my singing you'll hear something. He thinks my voice is swell.

The bartender (resignedly)—Heigh-ho!

First gent (at the other end of the bar, talking to himself)—Yes, sir. Thazz the whole trouble with this country—no privacy. We was getting some great harmony, too. (Resumes singing, but very low.) Come to me my mel'n'choly baby. No privacy.

Mail Today Will Swell Court List

25 Unlimited Fives Compete for Title At Eastern Gym; Play Starts Monday

An all-time Washington record and a mark that is believed to be a National one as well, was set last night when more than 100 teams entered the District A. A. U. basketball tournament, sponsored by The Washington Post. With the heavy list of clubs assured, it is known that several additional entries are in the mail postmarked before the deadline of midnight last night.

Virtually every team of importance, both male and female, in Washington and vicinity will compete in the gigantic court event which opens on Monday night in the new and modern Eastern High School gymnasium. Upward of 25 teams will make up the unlimited class in which one of the most thrilling struggles in the 10-year history of the tournament are expected.

The teams flocked into the tournament in numbers that forecast action from the opening whistle of the first contest Monday night until the seven championships are decided. In addition to The Washington Post trophies that go to the winning teams in each division, gold medals pionship clubs, with silver A. A. U. to individual members of the championship clubs with silver A. A. U. medals to be awarded the runners-up in each division.

Bolling Field Plays

In the unlimited division a long list of formidable fives are in line, including Bolling Field, Delaware and Hudson, United Typewriter, Dapper Dans, Army Medicos, Y. M. C. A. and others.

The girls' class promises to be a keen struggle. Ten teams had completed their entry last night with two others reported to have mailed their blanks. The list includes Rockville A. A., winner last year; Federal Trade, Sherwood, Highlanders, Agriculture, Hyattsville, Mount Rainier, REA and others.

Seventeen clubs will make a hot race of it in the 145-pound division. A partial list of the teams includes: Powell Community Center, Y. M. C. A. Flashes, St. Mary's Boys Club, St. Martins', Jewish Community Center, Chevy Chase, Takoma Junior Firemen, Police Boys Club, Alexandria Boys Club, Columbia Beverage, Georgetown Boys Club, Prince Georges Boys Club, Regal Neon Sign Co., Delta Phi Sigma, Al's Billiard Parlor, Arlington A. A. and Epsilon Mu Sigma.

12 in 135-Pound Class

Twelve teams are listed in the 135-pound class, the same number in the 120-pound class, 14 in the 105-pound class and 11 in the 90-pound class.

E. Joseph Aronoff, chairman of the registration committee of the A. A. U., requests all players to sign their own registration cards which must be presented before a player can compete.

N. C. State Enters Semifinal Round

Raleigh, N. C., March 2 (AP).—N. C. State, which last night eliminated Duke, defending champion, from the Southern Conference Basketball Tourney, tonight upset the fourth-seeded cadets of the Citadel, 40 to 38, to move into the semifinals.

Hill, State co-captain, led the attack which sends the Red Terrors against the Old Liners of Maryland, the tourney's second-seeded team, tomorrow night. Hill got 12 points, a total equaled by Jake Burrows, of the Cadets, who led their attack.

State started the scoring, but the Cadets immediately pulled even at 2-all. Then the Terrors spurted in front, 8 to 2, and held a good margin until only seven inutes remained in the game. Capt. Toby Holt, of the Citadel, made two free shots then, to tie it at 31-all, but Bill Mann put State in front and the Terrors held it.

Johns Hopkins Beats Wilson Here, 51 to 41

Visitors Hold Edge Throughout to Turn Back Teacher Five

Johns Hopkins University cagers held a see-saw 8-to-10 point advantage throughout a majority of the game to defeat Wilson Teachers College courtmen, 51-41, last night at Maryland University. The game was played in Ritchie Coliseum, due to the limited space of the Wilson court.

The Baltimoreans, led by Forward Melvin, who easily accounted for scoring honors with 7 field goals and as many foul shots, led 24-16 at halftime and held the safe margin throughout the final 20 minutes of play.

"Buddy" Nau paced the Wilson scorers with 13 points, while the usual high-scoring duo of Clark and Gordon were held to 5 and 4 points, respectively.

The Wilson five will entertain Shepherdstown (W. Va.) College Saturday night in the Wilson gym, in an attempt to avenge a 2-point defeat of last week.

Terp Ringmen Rated Strong Against Army

Although Maryland's boxing team has won only two matches against an undefeated string of five straight for the Army mittmen, the hosts will not be the underdogs in Saturday's bouts at Ritchie Coliseum.

The Terps have three draws, against Virginia, North Carolina and Catholic University, and wins over Duke and Rutgers, in addition to their Southern Conference title.

Army has triumphs over Syracuse, Cornell and Penn State among the East's stronger teams, and Western Maryland and Yale, weaker foes. The West Point team will defend its Eastern championship a week after the Terp bouts.

The bout record shows 26 victories and three defeats for the Army team, and 31 wins, 13 losses and 4 ties for the Terps.

Anacostia Five Beats Gonzaga In Last Minute

Scores 26-24 Victory After Trailing Three Periods in Wild Game

After trailing for three periods, Anacostia High's basketeers found the range in the closing chapter and pulled away to a 26-24 victory over Gonzaga yesterday in the Anacostia gym.

A goal by Placos in the closing seconds spelled victory for Anacostia.

The game, one of the roughest played in the Anacostia gym this season, saw the two teams battle tooth-and-nail from the opening tip-off to the final gun. Gonzaga got away to an early lead and held the upper hand until the fourth period was under way. Gonzaga led, 13-12, at the half.

Trailing 18-17 as the final chapter opened, Anacostia began a desperate stand and nine points in the closing minutes to take the game out of the fire. The score was tie at 23-all with three minutes to go.

Placos was high-point man for the winners, registering 8 points, Gordon and Koontz were next for Anacostia with 6 each. Rice, of Gonzaga, found the hoops for 8 points to tie Placos for game honors.

Park View Wins In Soccer Game

Park View defeated Taft-Burroughs, 6-0, in the final of the Junior Playground Department Soccer League yesterday, qualifying as the Washington representative in the national junior cup ties.

Lonny Ehrlich, center of the winners, had a field day, scoring four goals.

St. Alban's, by a 4-0 victory over Friends, took a commanding lead in the Private Schools League. Georgetown Prep, its nearest rival, must win all its remaining games to tie with St. Alban's.

Hoyas Favored Over Panthers In Game Here

Georgetown University cagers are just one game away from the first Eastern Conference basketball championship, and Pittsburgh will furnish the opposition Saturday night in Tech gym that can mean a major title for Elmer Ripley in his first year on his return as mentor on the Hilltop.

Coach Doc Carlson's charges, a sophomore quintet, have improved steadily after a disappointing record in the first part of the season, and a 43-41 upset victory over the in-and-out Hoyas is the most notable triumph of their recent comeback.

Georgetown, with a spotty but impressive record that includes six conference triumphs against three defeats, will be favored over the Panthers as they are unbeaten on Tech floor. A defeat would throw the standings into a jumble, with Penn State, Carnegie Tech or Temple's defending champions all having a crack at the playoff.

With Johnny McGowan definitely out of the line-up, Francis (Reds) Daly, who scored seven points in his first conference start as a regular against Penn State, will probably start at the center post.

A victory would undoubtedly give the Hoyas the greatest athletic year in history, as Coach Jack Hagerty's gridmen were undefeated for the first time in a half-century, and the Conference court crown would be added to the trophy list with Johnny Burke's Intercollegiate golf championship.

In a prelim to the important tilt, the once-beaten Hoya frosh battle Bolling Field, in an attempt to add them to the list of victims that include two victories each over Maryland and George Washington Frosh.

Down In Front

With Richards Vidmer

Among the Missing

There are 13 ways that a golfer can qualify for the very select list of players invited to participate in the Masters Tournament which will wind up the winter tour at the end of this month. But only 88 have been asked to participate in this year's event, with two more to be added later when all the scores are in from the cross-country caravan still in progress.

VIDMER

Of course some of those who have been invited qualify on more than one count. There is Gene Sarazen as an outstanding example. Gene gets an invitation not only because he was a former National Open champion, but also because he is a previous winner of the Masters, a former British Open titleholder, a former P. G. A. champion, a member of the last Ryder Cup team, finished among the first thirty in last year's Masters and finished among the first thirty in last year's Open.

There are several other ways to qualify for the the Masters in addition to the means Sarazen has taken to assure himself a place in the tournament which in the course of five years has moved right in behind the National Open, the National Amateur and the British parallels to these American classics. All former U. S. amateur champions qualify. All former British amateur champions are privileged to compete. All members of the last Walker Cup team are eligible and the last eight survivors in last year's National Amateur and P. G. A. tournments are invited automatically.

Those who come in at least one of these categories for this year's tournament include most of the big names in the game of golf, from Tommy Armour to Emery Zimmerman, one of the first thirty in the last Open. But there is one name conspicuously missing—the name of Craig Wood.

Perennial Runner-Up

Some sage once observed that no one ever seems to remember the fellow who finished second, and that has been the fate of the big, blond from New Jersey almost entirely through his career. He always is up with the leaders, but never the leader himself when the big titles are at stake.

His fate in the Masters alone is typical of his misfortune. In 1934, the first year the event was staged, Wood had finished his round and seemed sure of at least a tie for first place with a 72-hole score of 285. Horton Smith had a chance to tie him with a string of pars, but otherwise Craig had little to worry about. But Smith didn't get just a strong of pars. He sank a 20-foot putt for a birdie on the seventeenth hole and nosed out Wood by a stroke.

The next year Wood again seemed safely in as far as anyone could see. He had posted a magnificent 282 and there wasn't anyone left on the course who could catch him without the help of a miracle. But a miracle happened. Sarazen, facing the hopeless task of making up 3 strokes with only four holes left to play, smacked a four-wood 220 yards into the cup on the 485-yard fifteenth for a double eagle deuce!

WOOD

He picked up the 3 strokes on a single shot, got his pars from there in and finished in a tie with the man who was being congratulated prematurely. In the play-off the next day Sarazen won.

One Stroke Away

There were two Masters tournaments where Wood was only a stroke away from being assured a perpetual invitation to the annual Augusta event. But he has finished a heartbreaking second in other major tournaments too.

He tied for the British Open championship at St. Andrews in 1933, the first time he ever had played in Great Britain. But he was beaten by Denny Shute in the play-off. He went to the final round of the P. G. A. championship and lost to Paul Runyon in an extra-hole final match. On another occasion he finished third in the National Open, only a couple of strokes away.

He has won a great many tournaments, beating the best of the golfing gods and one season won more money on the winter circuit than any other pro who traveled the cross-country trail. But in the big events, with the major crowns at stake, Craig Wood has never been able to get better than in a tie for first place and always has been beaten in the play-off.

On the Outskirts

Which shows what a phantom thing permanent golfing glory can be. Billy Burke, Jim Barnes, Johnny Farrell, Olin Dutra, Willie Macfaralne, Sam Parks and all the others who ever have won the National Open, the P. G. A. or the Masters always will be asked back to Augusta when spring comes around. But Craig Wood still must earn his place in the royal ranks although he stood shoulder to shoulder with the greatest in the game for many years.

This isn't meant to be a defense of Craig Wood, nor a censure of the methods by which the invitation list is compiled by the officials of the Masters Tournament. As a matter of fact, the Masters has become the outstanding event that it is because of the selectivity of the competitors. Only those who have at least tasted fame tee off for the 72-hole test, and the gallery that gathers at the Augusta National is sure of seeing the most famous figures the game has and is producing.

But it always seems too bad that the men who almost won are so completely forgotten as the years roll by.

Villanova Stars in C. U. Track Meet

The Villanova mile relay team, above, composed of Tom McCabe, John Maher, Barney Bellew and Pete Yankauskas, is among the crack outfits which will perform in Catholic U.'s sixth annual indoor games at Brookland tomorrow night. Maher ran a virtual dead heat with Penn State's Barney Ewell in the Penn A. C. games last month to set a new mark of 5.1 seconds for the 50-yard dash.

Redland Bowl Tomorrow Has Eight Entries

Interest Mounting in Point-to-Point Tests At Brooke Johns' Farm

With a field of eight assured and a possibility that ten will compete, interest is mounting in tomorrow's Redland Bowl event, the feature of the Redland Hunt's third annual point-to-point races due to open the outdoor horse season hereabouts. The main event is a grueling test over a beautiful Montgomery County course that will have its start and finish on Brooke Johns' farm just north of Norbeck, on the extension of Georgia avenue that branches into Maryland.

The program includes two other races, one for the Terpenning Cup and another a heavyweight event. The Terpenning Cup is a pair race, with the first team crossing the finish line the winner.

Three pairs have been named thus far for the Terpenning Cup. They are: No. 1, Gone Away and Mack, to be ridden by Miss Nancy P. Hanna, and H. L. Welsh; No. 2, Duchess and Dallas, to be ridden by E. W. Fletcher and Miss Judy Johnson; No. 3, Stonewall Grey and Worthful, to be ridden by Boyd Keys and Dick Adamson.

Four entries have been received for the heavyweight race. This event will include Sir Rowdy, James T. Lowe; Twin Star, Joseph Richards, jr.; Battalion, Ralph Counselman; Leap Year, Thomas T. Mott, sr.; Try Me, Lieut. Commander Justice Lee.

'Dub' Sweepstakes May Set Record

A record-breaking entry may be the response to Bill Wood's inception to the 12th annual 'Dub' sweepstakes, scheduled to start Saturday with an afternoon block, a new feature of the 12-year-old event.

Any bowler, man or woman, with an average of 107 or under, is eligible for the 15-game event that will run Saturday with afternoon and night blocks, Sunday, and the following Sunday March 12.

The tournament, the only one in the city in which the 85 average bowlers have a chance, is the second oldest on the local duckpin calendar, with only the Howard Campbell a year its senior. Entries will be accepted at the Lucky Strike plant until starting time.

Three New Rifle Clubs Are Organized Here

Three new rifle and pistol clubs have been organized in the District and vicinity: Roger Williams Junior Riflists, Redskin Junior Rifle Club and the Naval Research Rifle and Pistol Club of Takoma Park.

The clubs are affiliated with the National Rifle Association, that embraces 3,000 active clubs, and run the number to 27 in this area.

Orioles, Rovers Compete Here For Post Trophy

Exhibition Hockey Game Is Slated for Wednesday Night

The Washington Post trophy, a gold, 16-inch cup suitably engraved, will be presented to the winner of the exhibition hockey game between the Baltimore Orioles and the New York Rovers at the new Riverside Stadium Wednesday night.

The Post trophy is significant because the Oriole-Rover tilt marks the inaugural of big-time hockey in the District and the game may be the forerunner of a permanent franchise here.

Washington already has demonstrated its ability to support major league baseball, pro football and other important sports events and the establishment of a hockey team here undoubtedly would be well received. This is apparent by the interest shown in the game next week.

Even if the match didn't have novelty to recommend it, the Oriole-Rover tilt would stand on its own merits. The Birds tied the New Yorkers, 1-1, in a thrilling overtime game before a packed house in Baltimore night before last.

Baltimore is leading the Walker Cup Series with 15 points and its nearest rival, appropriately enough, is the Rover sextet with 14. In the league standings, New York has the edge with Baltimore second. The Rover-Oriole rivalry never fails to bring out a large crowd and more than 300 Baltimore fans travelled to New York a week ago to see the teams battle in the Garden.

An equally large delegation is expected here Wednesday night. In addition to the game, a figure-skating exhibition will be presented. Skating will be free for spectators after the game.

'All-College Night' Listed At Gallaudet

A review of the entire sports year with every student taking part will feature the first "All-College Night," at Gallaudet tomorrow night, starting at 7:30 p. m. Co-ed students are included on the program, under the direction of Blair Smith.

The Blues varsity matmen will conclude their season in the opening event on the program, meeting Brooklyn Poly wrestlers. Following the mat bouts, the students will give exhibitions in boxing, fencing, volley ball, tumbling, table tennis and gymnastics; all by the male students.

The co-eds will follow with dancing exhibitions, archery, badminton and table tennis.

The program, already a month in preparation, will be concluded with a basketball game between the upper and lower classmen. The physical education directors and under-graduates are in charge of the performance.

N. E. All-Stars Win

Northeast All-Stars and Twenty-eighth Street Eagles pried the lid off the local sandlot diamond campaign yesterday on the latter's field, with the All-Stars winning the slugfest, 18-16.

Kann's Sets Pin Mark

654 Team Score Tops Store League

Margaret Lyon Leads Federal Bowlers; Banks Paces War Dept.

Losing possession of first place but chalking up a 654 team game, Kann's rollers set an all-time record in the Department Store League last night at Recreation Alleys, breaking the Hecht Co. 1934 mark by one pin. With Irwin Simon's 363 and Henry Miller's 359, Kann's grabbed 2 games from Lansburgh's. Frank Hissey rolled 356 for the losers.

Paced by Billy Kingsolver's 414 and Ray Utterback's 381, Woodward & Lothrop, defending champions, moved into the lead by one game when they whitewashed Raleigh Haberdasher.

In other matches Guy-Curran took the odd skirmish from Garfinckel's, while the Hecht Co. took a 2-1 decision from Jelleff's.

Federal League

Margaret Lynn's 342 set and Miss Carroll's 123 game topped the Federal League rollers at Arcadia, while Marines and Veterans' Administration shared game honors, with 523, and the former had high set, 1,514.

War Department

Charles Banks posted a 146 game and Frank Penfold a 386 set for tops in the War Department League at Arcadia, while Washington Aqueduct paced the teams with 566 and 1,647.

Inter-sorority

The corsage for weekly high game went to Emily McWilliams in the Intersorority League at Petworth, with a 136, while Louise Nuttycombe had a 344 set. Beta Gamma Phi's 1,535 set led the teams.

Silver Spring Ladies

Florence Douglas recorded a 325 set to top the Silver Spring Ladies League, as Monument Electric won three from RC Cola. Ruth Rothgeb's 324 was high as Congress Wallpaper won the odd one from Sheperds Park Restaurant, and Edmond's won two from Reed's with top set to Elizabeth Harris, with 314. Silver Spring Motor Sale blanked Hendrick's, led by Louise Miller's 322, and Southern Oxygen won two over Bergman's.

Insurance League

Bob Campbell had top score for the night in the Insurance League at Chevy Chase, with 138, while Sam Sugar had three consistent games for a 385 set. Aetna won all team highs with 596 game and 1,702 set.

GAO League

George Ketterling's 137 game and K. A. Halter's 377 set led the pinfall in the A and B division of the GAO League at Chevy Chase. Summaries' 570 game and Revenue No. 2's 1,599 set led the quintets.

Conn. Ave. Ladies

Doris Jolliffe, of the Early Birds, trimmed the pins for 108 and top game in the Connecticut Avenue Ladies' League at Chevy Chase. Janet Melitzer's 302 set topped, while Al's led the teams with 475—1,351.

Nats

Venezuelan finished his workout. And they won't have to worry about his control, either. I don't expect Bucky to believe me, but this fellow is the best pitching prospect I've ever seen."

All members of the Nats due in camp now are here. The squad is complete save for eight infielders and outfielders who will report on March 7. That contingent includes Buddy Myer, Cecil Travis, Buddy Lewis, Sammy West and George Case.

A separate class has been started for the two fat boys of the Nats' camp—Outfielder Taft Wright and Pitcher Harry Kelley. Wright is 12 pounds overweight and Kelley is carrying 14 surplus pounds. They have been sentenced to rubber shirts.

Official Prizes Listed In Lynn Sweepstakes

The official prize list for the fourth annual Margaret Lynn sweepstakes, held last week, was announced yesterday, with Inez Bryan and Lester Stout topping the women's and men's lists, respectively.

The complete list of money winners:

—On Fishing

ACKERMAN

During our recent fishing excursion in the Straits of Florida, we found District anglers everywhere. In the 170-mile stretch of the Florida Keys it was possible to count any morning more than a score of cars, and that many more Virginia and Maryland cars, loaded with rods and lunches, and seeking their favorite points of embarkation.

Back home again we find equally as many leaving, and expressing more than a little interest in the Key West section, which was the base of our trip. For fishing, it still has our heartiest recommendation, for a sightseeing trip—no.

The stories of black olives, Spanish limes, geiger trees, and flaming royal poincianas adorning the sunny streets, which extend from the Atlantic to the Gulf, seem to be more a figment of someone's imagination than real fact. They are there alright, but in a few of the enclosed gardens, and the bloom comes in the summer. As far as we can see, Key West is much the same as we found it on our last visit some ten years ago. Hot, unpainted—down at the heel.

The area for anglers, however, is the same mecca that has brought back the faithful year after year, and with the attraction of converts to this lush fishing during the past year, has come a small fleet of sport fishing boats in every way adequate to cope with the vagaries of tide and weather. All of them skippered by Key Westers, born in sight of the reefs and banks, and knowing their every hole and cranny. Captains with an eye for the weather, that unfailingly brings them in from the offshore reefs in plenty of time to miss the heavy going; or on other days to hold them close to the docks, even when every indication is for calm seas—but a forecast usually vindicated before the evening sun drops into the Gulf of Mexico.

No Northern angler, but who would go for this type of fishing in a big way, for it is from the blue waters beyond Sand Key Light that the two largest Atlantic sailfish ever caught were taken. On the intervening reefs, great amberjack, often exceeding 80 and 90 pounds in weight, countless savage-striking barracuda, and a variety of smaller reef fishes as numerous as is to be found on some South Sea atoll. It is in the channels to the north and west, however, that the real fishing is found. Waters, where the Silver King rolls and feeds, from early January until late in the summer.

Our trip this year was to none of these well-known fishing grounds, but to the Marquesas, a number of islands that on the chart are shaped like a grinning skull and reached through the 15-mile shoal area, west of Key West. Dotted with one Key after another, to Boca Grande Key, where as the course is set across the roll of Boca Grande Channel, can be dimly seen the mangrove-fringed Marquesas.

Both going and coming, this 10-mile stretch to the northwest entrance took nearly a half a day, for the big yellow-tail, redmouthed and Nassau grouper, kingfish and Lane snapper were taking yellow-headed feathers almost as fast as they were dropped over the side, but it was not until we got inside the Marquesas late in the evening that we realized that if there is such a place as a fisherman's heaven, this was it.

During the seven days we fished, the large boat was moved but twice, and outside of the droning navy planes overhead every morning, the only company we had was the cutter Balair from Briell, N. J., and Capt. Leo Droughton on his Sampan, when he came in for shelter one evening while on his way to the Dry Tortugas.

Bonefish and permit on the flats, barracuda, jewfish and tarpon in the channels, and under the mangroves snook, Lane snapper and mangrove snapper. Any and all of them ready and willing at any time to take a proferred lure.

Starting at daylight, two hour sessions morning, noon and evening were all we could take, and by the second day even that had ruined our 3½ ounce Heddon, because no ordinary rod could possibly stand up under the continuous heavy strikes, and constant fighting. Removal of the barbs on the lures slowed the going hardly at all—in fact only increased it, for less time was required in releasing the fish. The new 4 ounce Tycoon, with baitcasting butt which replaced the Heddon, finished out the week in fine shape, and showed no sign of the strikes of heavy snook and tarpon.

So if its fishing you want, by all means go to Key West, for as yet it isn't as crowded as our old fishing grounds around the upper keys where we were wont to fish for days at a time without hinderance or company, but which now, because of the new Overseas Highway, has brought anglers by the thousands. You can get good fishing from skiffs within a stone's throw from the shore, fish the almost endless reefs, from a guide boat at $25 per day, or sneak off as we did to the little fished out islands.

Mann Favored Tonight Over Knox in N.Y.

Dempsey's Bill Boyd Liked Over Robinson In Another Bout

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 2.—Promoter Mike Jacobs puts on another of his "measure 'em by the ton" all-heavyweight cards at Madison Square Garden tomorrow night, headed by a 10-rounder between combacking Natie Mann, of New Haven, and hopeful Buddy Knox, of Dayton, Ohio.

Mann has been coming along in smart fashion since his return to the ring after knockouts at the hands of Joe Louis and Tony Galento, and will probably go into tomorrow night's battle as slight favorite. He is anxious for revenge on Galento, whose victory over him the New Englander regards as somewhat of a "fluke."

Navy

Navy, and Harry Stella, of Army, are Kankakee, Ill., boys.

The Middies' new foes for 1939 are drawn from North and South gridiron ranks. Dartmouth's Big Green has been signed for what constitutes one of Navy's big home games at Baltimore on October 14. The other newcomer to the list will be Clemson to be met at Annapolis on October 28.

As usual, Navy's earliest opponents will be William and Mary on September 30 and Virginia on October 7.

The schedules:

Varsity—September 30, William and Mary, at Annapolis; October 7, University of Virginia, at Annapolis; 14, Dartmouth, at Baltimore; 21, Notre Dame, at Cleveland; 28, Clemson, at Annapolis; November 4, University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia; 11, Columbia, at Annapolis; 25, Princeton, at Princeton; December 2, Army, at Philadelphia.

B Squad—October 20, Princeton B; 27, Pittsburgh B; November 10, Penn State B; 17, University of Pennsylvania B.

Plebe—September 30, Massanutten Military Academy; October 7, Admiral Farragut Academy; 28, Kiskiminetas Springs School; November 4, Bordentown Military Institute; 11, Hun School; 18, Bullis School.

All B Squad and Plebe games will be played at Annapolis.

13-Year-Old Girl Wins Table Tennis Tourney

Carolyn Wilson, 13-year-old Leland Junior High School student, featured the novice table tennis tournament at Chevy Chase Ice Palace last night by winning the women's class over Jean Stauffer, 19—21, 21—13 and 21—17.

Miss Wilson was playing in her first tournament, after taking lessons from Stanley Fields, one of the country's top players. She has been playing only for a short time.

Brazil Agrees To Main Part Of Credit Deal

State Department Expected to Proclaim Program Shortly

The broad outlines of a three-point economic program, involving substantial credit extensions to facilitate trade, have been agreed to by Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha, of Brazil, and United States officials, it was reported in informed quarters yesterday.

The arrangement, it is expected, will be announced shortly by the State Department.

Although some points were said to be still under discussion, reports were that credit advances totaling $120,000,000 might be authorized.

RFC May Participate

A definite understanding has been arrived at, it is said, for credits up to a maximum of $20,000,000 to free Brazil's foreign exchange, permitting payments now in arrears to American business. There was some indication that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might participate directly in the credit advances.

Other points said to be involved in the program of economic cooperation were:

Credits from the Export-Import Bank to American exporters to finance sales in the Brazilian market.

Creation of a Central Reserve Bank in Brazil. This would involve, it is said, a monetary agreement between the United States and Brazil along the lines of the tripartite agreement with Great Britain, France and certain other European powers. The Treasury's $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund would be used to secure greater stability in Brazilian national currency and foreign exchange.

Company Plan Reported

It was said, meanwhile, that plans were under way for creation of a Brazilian-American company to promote development of "non-competitive products" for export to the United States and elsewhere.

Aranha and other members of the Brazilian mission, it was learned, will leave today for New York. The Brazilian foreign minister will return Saturday or Monday for a final chat with President Roosevelt.

Physician Cleared In Death Laid To Prescription

Philadelphia, March 2 (AP).—A coroner's jury exonerated Dr. John Raftery, a physician, and Pearl Borow, pharmacist, today over the shouted protests of the parents of a girl who died after taking medicine.

The jury had heard testimony the physician prescribed medicine for a minor ailment and found too late it was too strong.

Repealist Requests Dry Hearing Voice

Capt. W. H. Stayton, executive director of Repeal Associates, yesterday addressed a letter to Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, asking to be heard when and if hearings are held on the Guyer bill to restore prohibition here. No committee hearings are contemplated. Capt. Stayton wrote that prohibition engendered "shocking conditions and disreputable drinking habits."

Approached Hines Jury, Man Admits

New York, March 2 (AP).—Henry J. Ficke, 38, a former guard for a private detective agency, pleaded guilty today of attempting to tamper with the jury which convicted James J. Hines, Tammany district leader, on lottery conspiracy charges last Saturday.

He was remanded for sentence March 13—the same date set for the sentencing of Hines.

Salvatore Di Sapio, 36, a barber, arrested as an accomplice of Ficke, pleaded not guilty and was held in $7,500 bail for trial Monday.

Catholic Players Plan Lenten Drama

The Catholic Players Guild will produce a new Lenten drama at the Holy Name auditorium, West Virginia avenue and Neal street northeast, for two weeks, beginning Sunday, March 12.

A cast of 35 local players are busy rehearsing the original play, "The Third Cross," by James J. Glade, which will be sponsored on different evenings by various Catholic churches throughout the city.

News of Capital Night Clubs

Paul and Leon, the "Hollywood Midgets," now at Bamboo Gardens, are shown at Miami, where they "trained" recently with prize-beauty Marie McIntyre as referee

NEPTUNE RISES: Washington's newest night spot and restaurant, the Neptune Room, located in the Earle Theater building, will open during the first week in April, with a press preview party planned for Monday, April 3. Centrally located, smartly decorated, sponsored by experts in cuisine and entertainment—the Neptune Room seems to be rising under a lucky star.

SWEET "JAM": Around midnight Paul Kain's Metronome Room orchestra is likely to play a whirligig of sparkly tunes that you won't be able to recognize, for the life of you. If you ask what they're playing, you'll be told, "Sorry, but there's no name for it." The answer is that the boys are doing a flock of melodies that they have evolved cooperatively and casually. Paul leads the themes with his saxophone. It's really a "jam session," sweetened plenty.

BARRY-MORE: Bill Barry, who was at the King Cole Room some months ago, returns there tonight. He's a New York lad, remembered happily by K. Coleers for his bright vocalizing and cordiality.

GOAT'S MILK: Favorite beverage of Capt. Don Dickerman of the Pirates' Den (he says) is goat's milk. To justify himself he offered us a noggin of good old goat's milk. It tasted so darned gamey that we still think it was tiger's milk.

STARS IN RIVIERA: Alice Hughes, the Post's noted columnist, will be a guest of honor at the Lounge Riviera's fashion show luncheon next Saturday. Other luminaries present will include syndicate writer Dorothy Ducas; stylist Tobe, magazine editor Beatrice Mathieu and beauty writer Antoinette Donnelly.

ALTITUDE DANCING: Castaine and Barry (Pall Mall Room), still gasp when they recall dancing in Mexico City's El Patio a couple of months ago. The abrupt change to Mexico City's altitude of 8,000 feet above sea level, had our young dancers absolutely dizzy, and more than dizzy when they danced. "Every time we did a number, I thought I'd need a pulmotor before it was over," says Pauline Barry.

GYPSY QUEEN: Troika's new singer, Gypsy Marusia, must have been a queen of Romany in some former incarnation. She is triumphantly beautiful, her voice is flame and wine, she is dramatic as a storm cloud. No, we're not in an understating mood today.

ACE BASS: Rainbow Room's bass player, Frank Flanagan, is a very retiring lad—except when he rolls out those hot bass rhythms for supper dance sessions. When Frank starts to go to town on the bass, he immediately changes from introvert to extrovert. And any musician will tell you that a hot bass gives that final touch of "umph-h" to good dance music.

FLANAGAN

BLUE ROOM CONGRESS: Whether Congressmen come from North, East, South or West, they all seem to be magnetized by the Shoreham Blue Room. At one table the other evening were Representative and Mrs. Harold D. Cooley (N. C.), Representative and Mrs. Phil Ferguson (Okla.), Representative and Mrs. Harry Coffee and Representative and Mrs. Charles McLaughlin (Nebraskar all), Representative and Mrs. John J. Dempsey (N. Mex.) with Judge James D. Cooney, of Chicago, representing the Midwest.

That adept left-hand piano-ing of George Berg (Brown Derby) which gives so much color to the lower register of his numbers. George is luckier than most pianists in being ambidexterous.

ONE IN A MILLION: Jimmy Blue, accordionist and arranger for the Biltmore Boys (Shar-Zad Room), is sightless. He has to be led to and from the bandstand. But he has a gift not given to one person in a million and for which most musicians would willingly give at least one eye. He has what musicians call "perfect pitch" and perhaps it is because of that quickening of the other senses that comes to those who live in darkness.

WONDERFUL BIRTHDAY: Madrillon was packed all day long for its nineteenth birthday celebration. The new Van Sickler-Shook Orchestra received an ovation. Carnations and samples of the skyscraper birthday cake (by Clement) were dispensed lavishly. Peter Borras, finally dragged to the microphone, made a perfect and witty speech in just three sentences. It was like New Year's and the Fourth of July rolled up into one. A great start on a prosperous twentieth year for Madrillon.

Commissioners To Decide Today On Fire Chief

Five candidates for chief engineer of the Fire Department were considered yesterday by the District Commissioners, who probably will select Chief Charles E. Schrom's successor this morning.

Chief Schrom, who died Monday night in Emergency Hospital, was buried yesterday at Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

Deputy Chief A. C. Buscher, who is in line for the appointment, is now acting chief engineer. Buscher, who is 64, is eligible to retire soon, and it is believed this factor may prevent his receiving the appointment.

Other candidates are S. T. Porter, drillmaster at the School for Firemen; Calvin G. Lauber, fire marshal; H. A. Chapman, battalion chief, and C. A. Wells, battalion chief.

50 Speakers To Be Heard at A. B. A. Meeting

Regional Conference Will Be Held Next Week in New York

By Thomas M. Cahill.

More than 50 nationally known speakers will address the regional conference for commercial and savings banks, to be held March 8, 9, and 10, at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in New York, Philip A. Benson, president of the American Bankers Association, announced and numerous local bankers expect to attend the sessions.

The program will include talks by W. Randolph Burgess, former vice president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and now vice chairman of the board of National City Bank; Dr. Virgil Jordan, president of the National Industrial Conference Board, and William R. White New York State superintendent of banks. Arthur J. Linn, of Hamilton National Bank, of this city, is also on the program, as is Dr. Ernest M. Fisher, of the Federal Housing Administration.

Sessions will be divided into general business meetings and round table discussions. Expense control, interest rates, personnel, credit problems, installment credit, personal loans, real estate loans, values and appraisals, investment problems, bond accounts and the new types of checking services are some of the leading subjects for discussion.

Territory covered by the conference includes the District of Columbia and 11 States, including Maryland.

Maryland Savings Groups

Starting auspiciously in 1939, the 43 insured savings and loan associations in Maryland financed 181 loans on Maryland homes in January, totaling $563,000, it is reported by Nugent Fallon, general manager of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Cumulative figures of the amount of direct reduction loans on the books of those institutions totaled $15,678,000 on February 1.

"All indications point to a fine year for home financing and home building, and it is expected that the insured associations in Maryland will play a very important part in supplying the funds for much residential building in that State," Mr. Fallon stated.

He explained that, in addition to mortgage lending, these insured associations provide their communities with exceptional facilities for thrift. Each account is insured up to $5,000 per person by the insurance corporation, a $117,000,000 Federal Government instrumentality.

Aggregate assets of the insured associations in Maryland amount to $26,975,000. They are located chiefly in Baltimore. Other insured associations include the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Hagerstown and the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Cumberland.

Resident Appraisers

Washington will soon have a chapter of the Society of Resident Appraisers if plans of local building and loan associations are realized. After a report on objects of the society by Clarence E. Kefauver at the recent monthly meeting of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League, numerous members expressed themselves as desirous of affiliating with such an organization. Mr. Kefauver was named chairman of a committee to carry out members' wishes in the matter.

Tribute was paid by the group to Justice Bolitha J. Laws, of the District Court, for his attitude in connection with the recent jury fixing scandal. Arthur G. Bishop, president of the league, declared that Justice Laws' statement was the finest he had ever read and members unanimously voiced their appreciation of the Laws' decision.

Six new members were appointed to the general committee arranging the ninth annual dinner of the league to be held at Mayflower Hotel, March 25. Additions are George M. Emmerich, of Northern Liberty Building Association; Chapin Bauman, Oriental; Carl H. Ellingson, First Federal; E. J. Carlson, Prudential; Joseph Fitzgerald, Mutual, and James M. Woodward, Home. Martin A. Cook, general chairman, and Rudolph W. Santelmann, vice chairman, in their preliminary reports, stated this meeting will probably surpass all previous banquets in point of attendance, more than 500 guests being expected.

Spring Upturn

Members of Washington Association of Credit Men have been informed by Executive Manager Henry H. Heimann, of the National Association of Credit Men, that there is reasonable certainty of a late spring upturn in business con-

Bathlehem Steel Issues Report To Its Employes

New York, March 2.—Payment of high wages and maintenance of good relations between employes and management are stressed in Bethlehem Steel's annual report to its employes to be issued tomorrow.

According to the report more than $117,000,000 was paid to Bethlehem employes in wages and salaries during 1938. This is 44.3 per cent of the $265,000,000 received by Bethlehem during the year for goods and services.

"Figures recently published show that in 1938 the average earnings per hour of Bethlehem employes were 91.2 cents, compared with 90.2 cents for employes of the United States Steel Corporation, the largest producer in the industry," he report states, adding that "this comparison is an indication of the favorable position of Bethlehem's wage level in the steel industry."

Wool 19.1c in 1938 32c Year Before

The Agriculture Department estimated yesterday the 1938 wool production at 436,510,000 pounds compared with 432,809,000 in 1937.

The 1938 crop was valued at $71,378,000 compared with $117,270,000 in 1937. The 1938 price averaged 19.1 cents per pound at local markets compared with 32 cents in the previous year, the department said.

Wheat Prices Yield Slightly To Selling

But Reactions Are Minor When Buying Support Appears

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 2.—The wheat market was called upon today to absorb increased selling after yesterday's advance of almost a cent but it did so with only minor price reactions and closed only slightly lower.

Increased pressure based partially on slight declines at Liverpool and more optimistic crop reports from the domestic Southwest was met by good buying support most of the session. Pit brokers were unable to trace the source of the purchasing but said the market apparently had a substantial volume of resting orders. Mills, elevator interests and seaboard houses were believed buyers possibly in lifting hedges. None of the purchases could be attributed directly to export sales, but it was pointed out wheat and flour sales averaged 2,000,000 bushels weekly last month.

Wheat dipped as much as ⅜ cent at times but closed unchanged to ¼ lower compared with yesterday, May and July 68¾@68⅞. Corn was ⅛-½ off, May 49¼@49⅜, July 50⅝; oats ⅛ down; rye ⅛-¼ lower; lard unchanged to 3 cents down.

Railroads Report 2d Largest Deficit

By the Associated Press.

Class I railroads in 1938 had a net deficit after fixed charges of $122,911,784, according to complete reports for the year just receiving by the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads and made public yesterday. This was the largest net deficit after fixed charges in the history of the railroads except in 1932, when there was a net deficit of $132,203,821. Class I railroads have had net deficit in four years—1932, 1933, 1934, and 1938—of the past ten years.

Buying at Close Bolsters Sagging Prices Aircraft, Motor and Store Shares Gain Bond Market Generally Firm

—STABLER—M ..... SHRDLUU

New York, March 2.—Share prices slid gradually to lower levels for the greater part of today's session but selective buying near closing time bolstered the list and last prices were not far from Wednesday's finish. Aeronautical, motor and merchandising groups managed to gain some ground. In other divisions, carrier equipments and foods were shaded rather substantially. Rails, steels, coppers, utilities and oils held about even.

Foreign exchange dealings saw the guilder decline again. Dollar rates were firm against other European currencies as well. Bonds were fairly steady with some new interest in Latin-American liens with speculative possibilities. Tractions, which had zoomed on the city purchase offer announcement of the previous day, reacted to profit taking. Cotton and wheat were indifferent, the former closing 3 points up to 2 off and the latter ending unchanged to ¼ down.

Latent Power

In general, the stock session was appraised by seasoned traders, as exhibiting latent power. No signal was contained in the day's news, however, to touch off an advance. Public participation, despite the few active days at the end of February, is at a minimum. A restraining factor is the seasonal crop of 1938 annual financial reports. Some of which tell sad stories to corporate investors. Until these are completely out of the way, some of the Wall Street observers believe, it will be difficult to work up enthusiasm for the buying side. In the meantime, the non-professional stock owners are holding on stubbornly, there is virtually no short interest and securities probably will continue to be sensitive either up or down to major news developments.

A. T. & T. at New High

American Telephone was a strong feature of the big board list today, reaching a new high for 1939, one of 52 issues attaining that distinction despite the generally narrow price swings. The reasons, of course, is that general market levels are brushing the year's best. Other issues at new tops included Adams-Mills, Caterpillar Tractor, Eastern Air Lines, Howe Sound, U. S. Rubber preferred and New York Shipbuilding preferred.

Socony advanced in the petroleum division on brisk trading but brokers reported quite a bit of selling on other oil stocks. Greyhound led the most active list with a point gain and Chrysler ended ⅞ to the good. Baldwin Locomotive joined the fifteen most popular issues on buying based on announcement of the largest monthly total of bookings in the company's history during February. U. S. Steel rallied from its low of 62⅝ to end as 63¼, off fractionally. American Sugar issues were weak following overnight publication of a poor report. Hershey shares advanced sharply as did Union Carbide. The composite price of the 100 key stocks ended 0.06 point lower. Big board transfers totaled 599,215 shares.

Treasury Issues Irregular

Firm conditions prevailed today in most sections of the listed bond market, but there were a few soft spots which apparently were occasioned by profit-taking. Some of the local traction bonds that lately advanced on unification developments were marked slightly lower. United States Treasury issues were irregular, largely as a matter of adjustment to the note refunding statement. Latin-American default bonds advanced in the foreign group, turnover was $7,350,000.

B. M. T. 4½s fell more than a point, and the more active Interborough bonds were fractionally down. Manhattan Railway and Third Avenue issues remained in quiet demand. Speculative railroad liens moved higher with few exceptions, as the moves in Washington for aiding the carriers are beginning to be impressive. The borderline and default rails were uncertain. Allegheny Corporation obligations moved higher, but utility holding bonds reflected realizing sales. International Telephone bonds were good on Spanish developments.

United States Treasury issue trading resulted in gains to nine thirty-seconds of a point, and losses to four thirty-seconds of a point. There were five fresh highs in the intermediate and long dated obligations. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations showed modest strength. Best-rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds advanced fractionally, where changed, and most issues again are crowding the record highs.

In the foreign section, Brazilian, Colombian, Peruvian and Uruguayan bonds all tended to improve, but Chileans remained heavy. German and other European disregarded pledges were neglected. There was a little inquiry for Japanese and Italian bonds, while highest grade foreigns moved in a narrow range.

Zionists Yield; Resume Talks On Palestine

Assured British Plan for Arab Rule Is Not Final

By Frank R. Kelley

Special Cable to The Post.

London, March 2.—As a result of strong pressure by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, Jewish delegates to the Palestine conference decided tonight to resume negotiations with the British government on the British scheme for the ultimate creation of a nominally independent Palestinian state.

The Jewish decision was made following an hour's conference at the House of Commons between Chamberlain and Colonial Secretary Malcolm MacDonald; Dr. Chaim Weizmann, president of the Jewish Agency; Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York, and Ben Gurion.

Chamberlain was understood to have assured the Jewish delegation that the British plan, which they have refused to discuss, was in no sense final, and the Jews had every right to submit counter suggestions.

Jews Are Warned

At the same time, however, Chamberlain is believed to have warned the Jews not to carry out their threat to withdraw completely from the discussion if they did not wish to prejudice their case.

Whether formal talks between the Jewish and the British delegations should be resumed, will be decided by the executives of the Jewish Agency tomorrow.

Informal contacts between the two parties will be renewed at St. James's Palace at 10 a. m. tomorrow afternoon. Without accepting the British plan as a basis for discussion, the Jews will make observations on it. On the British government's reception of these observations will depend the future course of the conferences, as far as the Jews are concerned.

Arab counterproposals to the British scheme were examined this afternoon by the small Anglo-Arab committee which was set up yesterday to hasten the work of the conferences. The Arabs, although willing to accept the plan for discussion, are understood to have rejected some of its main points.

Arabs to Rule

The Arab proposals are reported to call for the early election of a constitutional assembly for the Holy Land, in which Arabs will predominate by virtue of their two-thirds majority in population. All citizens of Palestine would be eligible to vote irrespective of creed.

The British mandate over Palestine would be replaced, according to the Arab plan, by a treaty of alliance and defense on the Anglo-Egyptian model. This would be negotiated in London.

After conclusion of the treaty and abandonment of the mandate, the British high commissioner would cease to hold office.

Jewish immigration and acquisition of land should cease according to the Arabs, whose proposals will be discussed again Saturday morning.

The union of orthodox rabbis of the United States and Canada, meeting today at the Broadway Central Hotel, decided to send a delegation to Washington to lay the problem of the British plan to abandon the Palestine mandate before President Roosevelt. A cable to Prime Minister Chamberlain was sent expressing the hope Britain would "reconsider" the plan.

William Green Protests

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, yesterday sent a cable to Neville Chamberlain, prime minister of England, declaring he was "shocked by the suggestion that the Balfour declaration be repudiated" and asked that England "maintain the open door in Palestine, preserving the Balfour declaration without modification."

Protesting the establishment of an Arab state, under which the Jews of Palestine would have "minority status," President Green asked that "Palestine be preserved as a refuge for the homeless victims of totalitarian hate."

In a statement, Mr. Green emphasized the high standard of living and the excellent labor conditions in Palestine, all of which would be endangered if the country were turned over to the control of Arab influences.

"It is unthinkable," Mr. Green said, "that Palestine, too, should deny the Jew refuge when one door after another is being closed to him by all the countries of the world."

O'Mahoney Backs Tour by Postoffice Philatelic Truck

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, yesterday approved the expenditure of $6,500 to send the Postoffice Department's philatelic million-dollar collection on a tour of the United States.

"This expenditure would result in a many-fold increase of postal revenues from the sale of stamps to new collectors," O'Mahoney said.

The special philatelic truck is shed-bound at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing because the subcommittee refused to approve the money.

Meanwhile, Collectors Club, Branch 5, Society of Philatelic Americans, adopted resolutions saying: "This truck is considered an adjunct of the Philatelic Agency and its educational as well as its philatelic features are highly approved by stamp collectors generally."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

False-carding even fools experts at times and there can be no great blame heaped on one of them when a clever false-card throws him completely off. Today's hand is an example of a smart play by a declarer who found himself in a highly optimistic three-no trump contract and had to dig deep into his bag of tricks to bring home the contract.

The hand came up in a rubber game participated in by four men who thought every hand was a slam—or almost one—and there was no dearth of aggressive bidding. Happily, they were all good players and there were few large sets, despite an afternoon of highly spirited bidding.

But to get down to the hand in today's box. West opened the five of spades. East played the jack and declarer did a little thinking. From the bidding he marked West with the ace of diamonds and thought that his only way of making his contract was to fool West. So, instead of playing the queen of spades, he went right up with the ace.

A small diamond was led to the board and West went in with the ace and continued the spade suit, thinking that his partner held the queen in view of South's false card. South, of course, won the trick with the queen and cashed his high cards for three no trump.

A sample of the aggressive bidding at this rubber session is this hand:

West opened the king of clubs, which was taken with the ace of the board. South discarded a small diamond. The nine of diamonds was returned from the board. East and South played low and West took with the ace. West continued the club suit, a small diamond was ruffed on the board, trumps were drawn, and high cards cashed for the remainder of the tricks.

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

THE Federal Government has drawn on its expert personnel to help German refugees in their plight.

William Kramer, chief of the division of operations, Forest Service; Atherton Lee, director of the Puerto Rican experiment station, Agriculture Department, and Arthur E. Kocher, of the soil conservation service, have gone to Santo Domingo to investigate the possibilities in agriculture and forestry for the refugees, whom Santo Domingo has expressed a willingness to take to the approximate number of 100,000.

Sources in the Forest Service said yesterday that the request for the loan of these experts was made by Sumner Welles of the State Department, to Secretary Wallace. The assignment is of a temporary nature. The experts probably will be in Santo Domingo from a month to 60 days. They have all had scientific experience in the tropics. Kramer once did good work in the Luquillo National Forest in Puerto Rico. The President's Committee on Political Refugees aided in securing the services of the three experts.

WITH jubilant voice, Alex Lindh, of the forest service land acquisition division, told yesterday of his transfer from Washington (which he has tolerated) to Missoula, Mont., (in the big West that he loves.) Lindh, who looks like a movie actor to the women (tall, blonde handsome) will go to Missoula to control fires in Region 1 of the Forest Service, the toughest fire region there is. The fact that they picked him for the tough job is a big compliment. He knows Missoula, having graduated from the University of Montana school of forestry there 17 years ago.

PREDICTION: That a lively something will come yet from the issue of bringing out of the shed that philatelic truck the Postoffice Department built to take its prize exhibit of stamps and philatelic paraphernalia on a tour of the Nation. The Senate appropriations sub-committee refused the item of approximately $6,000 that would have brought the truck from the shed and put it on the road. Now the situation arises: Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, a mighty stamp collector, former First Assistant Postmaster General and member of the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, is aroused because the truck doesn't come out the shed. He is prepared to act. But, at head of the Senate Appropriations Committee is Carter Glass, who said, on one occasion, that he thought very little of stamp collecting. Senator Glass' son, Carter Glass, jr., is a mighty stamp collector, and he is in the record as saying that his father can't be changed when it comes to stamp collectors. So what Senator O'Mahoney will do and Senator Glass won't do may result yet in some sprightly rhetoric.

MILDRED SHUNK, of the Civil Service Commission, asks us to try and get a name for the Catoctin Camp that will be used, after June, by the Federal Camp Council. Such names as dew-drop-in or Camp Linger-a-while, or anything with the word Catoctin in it are out from the start. She thinks that the area up there is so historic that some name might be drawn from the very background. In any event, this column has agreed to receive the suggested names, so if you have one in mind, send it to the Federal Diary. There are no prize; it's all for love of the good old camp.

Incidentally, the Federal Camp Council, which is composed of recreational organizations in the Federal service, is looking for a permanent director for the camp. He must be a man who knows his business and is entirely responsible, they say.

HARRY E. REED, Missourian in Washington, has been appointed as assistant chief of the bureau of agricultural economics. Interestingly, the appointment is popular with his fellow Missourians here and with Agriculture Department scientists, who watch their fellows very critically and say in this case that Reed knows as much about live-stock production as any living man. He was an American representative at the Dairy Congress in Berlin, Germany, in 1937 and told them a lot they didn't know about beef. He also learned from them some very choice recipes for cooking a steak to a queen's taste, an art every cattle-raising Missourian prides himself on anyhow.

Bob Burns Says—

There's a couple of husky high school lads in Belleville, N. J., who are rentin' themselves out nights for the care of babies! So far, most of their patronage is comin' from young married couples that want to take in a movie. Now I think this is a right smart idea an' no reason at all why it can't develop into a new national industry for young men! These boys are earnin' some nice side money nights, while studyin' their school books between squawks of the baby. Besides, it's mighty good trainin' preparatory to their growin' up an' becoming' fathers themselves.

Lucky the girls that marries housebroken men like these! All they gotta do is have the babies an' their worries is over. They don't have to know nothin' about a baby's care—preparin' the little tike's bottle, walkin' the floor, or tyin' three-cornered knots. They've got the finest nursemaids in the world right in their own homes. The only thing that's apt to be embarrassin' is this: when their baby gets old enough to talk, who's he gonna call "Mama?"

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Bobby Coon Grows Curious

The opportunist always takes Advantage of good fortune's breaks.

Bobby Coon.

Like so many other people of the Green Forest and the Green Meadows, Bobby Coon is an opportunist. People who live from day to day, seldom knowing where the next meal is to come from, must be opportunists. They must be always prepared to take advantage of whatever happens in their favor, however unexpected. It is this that makes one an opportunist.

Bobby Coon had spent the greater part of the winter asleep. It wasn't the deep sleep of Johnny Chuck or Nimbleneels the Jumping Mouse. During mild periods he did waken and sometimes stir about a little. It was still cold and really the tail-end of winter when he began to be active and prowl about in search of food. He hasn't the t' rifty habit of laying away a store of food in the fall, as do the members of the Squirrel family, but he does at that time put on a thick layer of fat beneath his skin. This is to be drawn on somewhat while he sleeps, and heavily after he becomes active. Then he becomes thin and thinner and is at all times hungry.

It was while Hooty the Horned Owl and Mrs. Hooty were keeping their precious eggs from becoming chilled by taking turns sitting on them that Bob Coon dec'led that he had enough of cold-sleep, as his winter sleep is sometimes called, and it was time for him to be out and about. While he slept of course he felt no hunger. When he first awoke he felt litlte hunger. This was just as well for there was little enough to eat, goodness knows. But moving about drew on that score of fat and as the fat decreased, hunger increased. The hungrier he became the more he ran about looking for something to eat, and the more he ran about the faster he used up the fat until at last it was all gone. He could go about much more quickly and easily, for thin people always get about much more easily than fat people.

For four weeks Hooty and Mrs. Hooty took turns sitting on those eggs, on pleasant days and nights and on stormy ones, through snow and sleet and cold rain, all sorts of weather. No tonce were those eggs chilled despite the fact that there was some bitter cold. Once o... were those eggs in danger and then only for a moment. That was when Chatterer the Red Squirrel climbed to the nest while the two Owls were trying to catch Jumer the Hare. Their return before Chatterer could do any mischief nearly cost him his life and gave him one of the worst frights he ever had known. He was lucky to escape and he knew it. After that he kept away from that neighborhood.

During that four weeks it happened that never once did Bobby Coon visit that part of the Green Forest where Hoty's nest was, so of course he knew nothing about it. It was not until one evening shortly after the second egg had hatched that Bobby happened over that way. You know he prefers to roam at night rather than in daytime. Mistress Moon was shining and looking up Bobby saw high in a tree a black mass. He knew at once what it was.

"A nest," he muttered. "Now I wonder whose nest that is. I don't remember a nest in this tree. I suppose Redtail the Hawk and Mrs. Redtail are back. I wonder if they built tha tnest. Perhaps it is Blacky the Crow's. He and Mrs. Blacky nest pretty early sometimes. I wonder if there are eggs in it. I could do with some eggs. Yes, sir, I certainly could. Perhaps it isn't finished yet. And perhaps after all it is an old nest and I have forgotten it. Ha! what was that?"

He pricked up his ears and listened. It seemed to him that he had heard a faint sound and that it had come from up over his head. Could it have come from that nest? His curiosity was aroused. He stared up at the nest questionally. As a said in the beginning Bobby Coon is an opportunist. Was this an opportunity?

Ex-Ambassador Dodd Receives $250 Fine After Admitting Hit-Run Charge; Loses Vote

Doctor's Testimony On His Frail Health Averts Jail Sentence

By International News Service.

Hanover, Va., March 2.—Frail William E. Dodd, 69-year-old former United States Ambassador to Germany and one of this Nation's well-known historians, today lost, by the utterance of one word, his right as a citizen to vote.

The elderly critic of Nazi Germany pleaded guilty in Hanover courthouse to a felony charge of hit-and-run driving.

Three months ago Dodd's car struck down Glois Grimes, 5, colored. She is still confined in a Richmond hospital, where physicians said her eventual complete recovery is questionable.

The resigned envoy was fined $250, for which he promptly submitted a check, and his automobile driving license was revoked automatically for one year.

Influenced Light Sentence

Dodd's precarious health influenced the court to impose the light sentence. He was liable to a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a $5,000 fine, or both.

Because hit-and-run driving is a felony in Virginia, Dodd, by amending his not-guilty plea to guilty, was disfranchised as a voting citizen.

Gov. Price may, if he sees fit, restore the franchise right to the noted former envoy.

A number of witnesses testified to his former record as a "law-abiding citizen."

Dodd engaged in frequent whispered conversation with his daughter, Mrs. J. C. Stern, and his two attorneys, Leith C. Bremner, and R. Walton Moore, State Department counselor, during the proceedings. He was repeatedly reprimanded by the court for these interruptions. He was also prevented from making an explanation of the accident.

Faces $25,000 Damage Suit

Bremmer said study of the statutes convinced him Dodd's earlier plea of not guilty had been incorrectly taken. Dodd had claimed he was "not sure."

Testimony to mitigate severity of sentence was made by Dr. F. D. Suttenfield, of Georgetown University Hospital, Washington, and Dr. F. C. Pratt, of Fredericksburg, Va. They declared Dodd suffers from progressive arterio-sclerosis, nervous exhaustion and laryngitis. Dr. C. C. Coleman, the child's physician, testified she was "apparently recovering," but that complete convalescence could not yet be soundly predicted.

Dodd has personally contributed $1,131 for the child's care, it was testified. He faces a separate $25,000 damage suit brought by her parents.

Leaving the courtroom, he said the sentence was satisfactory to him.

Dodd was named Ambassador to Germany in 1933. Last year he resigned after he bitterly criticized the Nazi government and Adolf Hitler.

Ad Club Hears Talk by Jacobs

Stage fright is the greatest obstacle for public speakers to overcome, Granville B. Jacobs, who has trained many business leaders in public speaking, told the Advertising Club of Washington at a luncheon yesterday.

More and more executives are training themselves to speak before large audiences, he said, because of the increasing number of conventions and business meetings.

Dr. Burke Speaks On Care of Teeth

Parents make a mistake in neglecting their babies' first teeth, Dr. J. P. Burke, past president of the Dental Society of the District, warned last night in the weekly Public Health Forum at Georgetown University.

Dr. Burke declared care of the first teeth may save much dental trouble as the child grows up.
